Tar Heels Earn 10th CWS Trip

Top overall seed North Carolina will be making its 10th College World Series appearance, including its sixth in the last eight years, after beating South Carolina in the Super Regionals two games to one.

The Tar Heels will meet a familiar foe in ACC rival NC State (49-14) to open the CWS at 3 p.m. ET on Sunday.

Carolina claimed the season series, 2-1, thanks to a 2-1 win in 18 innings at the ACC Tournament. The teams split the regular season series in Raleigh, with game three getting rained out.

Also on UNC's side of the bracket are No. 4 seed LSU (59-7) and UCLA (44-17), who will play at 8 p.m. ET on Sunday.

All of the 2013 College World Series games can be seen on ESPN and ESPN2 along with WatchESPN.com.

Back To Omaha

- Carolina will be making its sixth CWS appearance in the last eight years and 10th overall.
- The Tar Heels own a 15-19 overall mark in the CWS, including a 13-11 record since 2006.
- The 10th CWS appearance ties the Tar Heels for the 13th most in NCAA history.
- Only LSU has more appearances in the 2013 field.
- UNC is the 11th team to make six CWS appearances in an eight-year span joining Arizona, Arizona State, Florida State, LSU, Miami, Northern Colorado, Oklahoma State, Southern California, Stanford and Texas.
- The last team to accomplish the feat was Stanford who did it in 1997 and then five straight trips from 1999 to 2003.

Fox In Rare Company

- UNC head coach Mike Fox has returned the Tar Heels to the CWS for the sixth time in his 15 years as Carolina's head coach.
- Fox is one of 13 head coaches to both play in and coach in the CWS as he was a member of Carolina's 1978 CWS team.
- Only six head coaches have both played for and coached their alma mater in the CWS; Fox is joined by: Mikee Gillespie (USC), George Horton (Cal State Fullerton), Jack Kaiser (St. John's), Mark Marquess (Stanford) and Joe Russo (St. John's).
- Fox was 4-for-16 (.250) with a home run, a triple and three RBIs in the 1978 CWS.

UNC's NCAA Tournament History

- Carolina is making its 28th NCAA Tournament appearance and has posted a 94-62 all-time record in the event.
- The Tar Heels are 31-7 as the host in the NCAA Tournament and had a run of 16 straight wins snapped a year ago against St. John's.
- UNC is 6-1 in advancing to the Super Regional round when hosting a regional and 5-0 in advancing to the College World Series when hosting a Super Regional after its series win over South Carolina.

2011 Tar Heels Making A Return Trip

- The 2013 College World Series appearance will be the second visit for nine Tar Heel players who played in the 2011 CWS.
- Three starting position players from 2011 return for the Tar Heels, including ACC Player of the Year Colin Moran who hit .333 in his first trip to Omaha.
- Senior Chaz Frank and junior Brain Holberton also started all three games in 2011.

- No one made a bigger splash in Omaha in 2011 than junior starting pitcher Kent Emanuel who twirled a four-hit shutout of Texas in the second game as a freshman.
- Relievers Chris Munnely and Tate Parrish also appeared in Omaha.

History Against The CWS Field

- The Tar Heels will open the 2013 College World Series against a very familiar foe in NC State.
- The matchup will be the 285th meeting between two schools and will equal the most played rivalry in UNC baseball history with the series with Virginia.
- The two teams split the season series before UNC emerged with a 2-1 win in 18 innings at the ACC Tournament.

for UNC emerged with a 2-1 win in 18 innings at the ACC Tournament.

- UNC and LSU have met four previous times with the two most recent coming in the 2008 College World Series.
- The Tar Heels won both of those contests to even the all-time series. LSU won a pair of games in regular season tournaments to open the 1990 and 1997 seasons.
- UNC owns a 5-1 edge on UCLA and a 1-0 edge in postseason play after an 8-5 win in the 1993 NCAA Central Regional.
- The Tar Heels and Bruins played a home and home series in 2000 and 2001 with Carolina sweeping the series in Los Angeles before the teams split a two-game series in Chapel Hill in 2001.

UNC And ACC Wins Record Within Reach

- With Carolina's 5-4 win over South Carolina in the NCAA Chapel Hill Super Regional the Tar Heels posted their 57th win of the year, equaling the mark of the 2007 team that reached the CWS Finals.
- The 2013 group is the sixth team in school history to record 50 wins in a season and the fifth since 2006.
- A win in the CWS would give the Tar Heels 58 for the year, the most in school history and the most by an ACC team since Florida State won 60 in 2002.
- Three wins would tie Carolina with the FSU team from 2002 and the 1991 Clemson squad for the most wins in ACC history.

Offensive Explosion In 2013

- The 2012 season saw the Tar Heels eliminated in the regional round for just the second time since 2006 and as a result the Heels finished below 400 runs scored for the first time since 2005.
- The 2013 season has been an offensive resurgence for the Tar Heels as they have scored more runs than any other UNC team during the BBCOR era.
- The Tar Heels lead the country in runs scored at 529 so far and are 12 runs shy of tying the school record for runs scored in a season set in 2002.

Lefty-Heavy Lineup No Problem For Heels

- With five and sometimes six left-handed bats in the Carolina lineup, a number of opponents have resorted to throwing left-handed starters against the Tar Heels.
- The Tar Heels are 37-2 this year when a right-handed pitcher starts the game but were 14-6 against left-handers going into the ACC Tournament before winning four straight games in which southpaws started for the opponent.
- Carolina has won 11 of its last 15 games in which a left-hander has started the game after facing a southpaw once in the regionals and all three games of the super regionals.
- UNC was 15-7 against left-handers last year and posted a .261 average.
- UNC is hitting .270 against lefties this year and is paced by freshman Landon Lassiter (.417) and Skye Bolt (.330) en route to a 20-8 mark.

Young Bullpen Stepping Up To The Challenge

- Entering the season the Tar Heels had uncertainty at the back end of the bullpen due to the departure of UNC's single season saves leader Michael Morin.
- Freshman Trent Thornton forced his way into the weekend picture with five stellar midweek starts and has emerged as the de facto closer for the Tar Heels.
- Thornton owns the seventh-lowest ERA in the nation at 1.28 and has tied Paul Shuey for the UNC freshman saves record with 8 in 2013.
- Thornton came on in both super regional victories and now has 11 wins on the season.
- Fellow Ardrey Kell graduate Chris McCue has been nearly as dominant for the Tar Heels this season with a 7-1 record and a 2.17 ERA in 28 appearances.
- With two appearances in the CWS Thornton and McCue would join Trevor Kelley with 30 appearances on the season, marking the first time since 2011 that UNC had three pitchers with at least 30 games pitched.

Moran Among Nation's Best

- Junior third baseman Colin Moran was mentioned as a preseason Player of the Year candidate and has lived up to the billing as he has emerged as a finalist for the Dick Howser Trophy in addition to the Golden Spikes Award.
- Moran currently leads the country in RBIs with 88 and broke the school record of 83 set in 2004.
- With two RBIs at the CWS Moran would become the first ACC player to reach the 90-RBI plateau since Buster Posey had 93 for Florida State in 2002.
- Moran is the first player in UNC history to draw 60 walks, score 70 runs and drive in 80 runs.
- The junior was drafted sixth overall in the MLB Draft by Miami.
- Moran is within four of Dustin Ackley's three-year career marks of RBIs and walks. Ackley finished with 198 RBIs and 133 walks, while Moran has 194 RBIs and 129 walks with at least two games to play.

Another Super Regional Win

- Carolina punched its ticket to Omaha with its sixth NCAA Super Regional series win and second over South Carolina.
- The Tar Heels opened their Omaha run with a super regional win at Alabama in 2006 before hosting the next five super regionals winning in 2007 over South Carolina, 2008 over Coastal Carolina, 2009 over East Carolina and 2011 over Stanford.
- Carolina is now 5-0 in super regional series as the host.

Heels Not Backing Down

- The Tar Heels became the 20th team since 1999 to win not only a regional game seven but also a super regional game three to get to the CWS.
- Six of those 19 teams reached the CWS Final, including the 2005 and 2008 National Champions, Texas and Fresno State.
- The Tar Heels came back a pair of times in the regional final win over Florida Atlantic to emerge with a 12-11 win in 13 innings before holding off South Carolina in the super regional.

Another Successful Draft

- The selection of Colin Moran in the first round marked the seventh first round selection in the MLB Draft for Carolina since 2006.
- Carolina had six players drafted for the first time since the 2009 team had seven players drafted.

- The four picks in the first 10 rounds were also the most since the 2009 team that had six among the top 10 rounds.

Going Up Against Some Of The Best

- Carolina played 30 games prior to the NCAA Tournament against teams that earned a spot in the field of 64, the third-highest total in the tournament.
- The Tar Heels posted an NCAA-best 22 wins against teams in the NCAA Tournament and all eight of their losses in 2013 have come against teams in the tournament.
- UNC finished with the fifth-hardest schedule in the country according to Warren Nolan and the second-hardest of any regional host.

Games vs. Tournament Teams

32 - Mississippi State
31 - North Carolina, Texas A&M
30 - Arkansas

Wins vs. Tournament Teams

23 - North Carolina
20 - Virginia
19 - LSU

Stubbs - The Unsung Hero

- Senior first baseman Cody Stubbs has quietly gone about his business all year long and in the process has posted one of the better seasons in the country.
- With the star power of juniors Colin Moran and Kent Emanuel, Stubbs has slid under the radar despite tallying the fifth-most RBIs in school history.
- Stubbs currently ranks third in the country in RBIs and has moved into fourth in the nation with 26 doubles on the year.
- His 26 doubles is tied for the second-most in school history and only trails Kyle Seager's mark of 30 in 2008.

Freshman Bats Providing Punch

- The duo of Landon Lassiter and Skye Bolt was expected to contribute in 2013 but no one anticipated what the pair has been able to do in their first year on campus.
- Lassiter currently sits second on the team with a .361 average and has scored a team-high 74 runs, thanks in large part to his .502 OBP.
- Bolt was forced to miss 17 games in the middle of the season due to a broken foot but has posted a .330/.429/.508 slash line in 50 games.
- The pair has combined to provide some heroics in the tournament as Lassiter scored the game-winning run in the regional final and Bolt drove in the winning run in the super regional opener.

Pitching Duo Joins Rare Group

- Junior Kent Emanuel became UNC's junior wins leader this season as he has posted 28 victories in his time at Chapel Hill.
- Emanuel has accumulated 11 wins this season, tying for the eighth most in a single season.
- Trent Thornton joined Emanuel in the 11 win club with a pair of wins in the super regional and became the first duo to post 11 wins or more since Adam Warren and Robert Woodard did it in 2007.

A 12th Regional Title

- The Tar Heels used a pair of three-run wins to reach the regional final against Florida Atlantic but were knocked off on a three-run home run on Sunday to force a game seven.
- The game seven was the third for the Tar Heels in regional play and UNC came out on the winning side for the first time in three tries after losing in 2000 and 2002 in the regional final.
- The dramatic 12-11 win in 13 innings saw Carolina overcome a 2-run deficit in the ninth and a 3-run deficit in the 12th before winning in walk-off fashion in the 13th.
- The regional crown was the 12th overall for the Tar Heels and seventh since 1999.

Doubling Up

- With the improbable sweep through the ACC Tournament, Carolina became the 15th team in the last 40 ACC Tournaments to claim the tournament crown after finishing the regular season atop the standings.
- Carolina opened with a 10-0 run-rule win over Miami before scoring five runs in the ninth inning against Clemson to force extra innings where the Tar Heels secured a 12-7 win in 14 innings.
- The very next night Carolina faced off against NC State and played the longest game in ACC Tournament history as the Tar Heels emerged with a 2-1 win in 18 innings. The 18-inning game was the longest game in UNC history.
- The Tar Heels capped off the week with a 4-1 win over Virginia Tech on Sunday to claim their sixth ACC Tournament title, first since 2007 and second since 1990.

Holding Seed

- Carolina is one of eight teams to enter their conference tournament as the top overall seed and win the tournament this season.
- The Tar Heels went 4-0 en route to the ACC Tournament title after posting a league-best 21-7 mark in conference play.
- Joining the Tar Heels as No. 1 seeds to win their conference tournaments are:
Atlantic 10 - Saint Louis, Big Ten - Indiana, Conference USA - Rice, MEAC - Savannah State, NEC - Bryant, Summit - South Dakota State and SWAC - Jackson State

Avoiding A Losing Streak

- Carolina has not suffered back-to-back losses this season and if the Tar Heels can continue the streak they would become the ninth UNC team since 1910 to avoid a losing streak.
- The last time a Carolina team did not suffer a losing streak in a season was 1953.
- The 1974 and 1984 teams did not have a losing streak during the regular season but suffered back-to-back losses in the 1974 ACC Tournament and the 1984 NCAA Tournament.

Taking Free Passes

- Traditionally the Carolina offense has been known to grind out at bats and work counts against opposing pitchers.
- The Tar Heels currently rank third in the country with 357 walks, the second-highest total in school history.
- The school record for walks in a season is 358, set by the 2011 team that reached the College World Series.
- Colin Moran leads the Tar Heels with 61 walks in 2013, the third-most in the country and the second-most in UNC history.
- Moran needs eight more walks to break the school single season record and is fourth in career history with 129.

Heels Bring The Bats

- Carolina turned in one of its most productive weekends of the year during the regional round as the Tar Heels hit .382 as a team in the four games of the NCAA Chapel Hill Regional.
- The .382 average was nearly 40 points higher than any other team during regional action and nearly 50 points higher than any weekend series in 2013 for the Tar Heels.
- UNC slipped a bit against South Carolina's pitching staff but still leads the CWS participants:

CWS Teams NCAA Tournament Averages

.319 - North Carolina
.309 - Indiana
.307 - Mississippi State
.306 - Oregon State
.302 - LSU
.276 - UCLA
.267 - NC State
.261 - Louisville

Roberts Could Miss Time

- Junior catcher Matt Roberts suffered a thumb in the regional final win after taking a foul ball off of his throwing hand and will likely miss some time due to the injury.
- Roberts had turned in a 3-for-10 weekend with a run scored and a double before leaving early in the contest.
- Roberts has appeared in 55 games with 44 starts behind the plate.
- Junior Brian Holberton caught all three games of the super regional.

Impressive In All Phases

- Carolina has a chance to do something only three other teams have done the past 25 years in college baseball.
- If the Tar Heels keep up their scoring and run prevention pace, they have a chance to become just the fourth team since 1989 to finish among the top 5 in the country in both scoring and earned run average.
- Only 11 teams since 1989 have finished a year in the top 10 in both scoring and earned run average.

Teams Finishing Top 5 In Scoring And ERA

2001 - Delaware State (1st-Scoring; 1st-ERA)
1996 - LSU (5th-Scoring; 5th-ERA)
1989 - SW Louisiana (5th-Scoring; 2nd-ERA)
2013 - UNC (3rd-Scoring; 14th-ERA)

Starting To Pick It

- After a year where Carolina snapped a string of five straight seasons of fielding percentages above .970, the Tar Heels have bounced back this season and own the second-best fielding percentage in UNC history.
- The Tar Heels committed 74 errors for a .968 fielding percentage in 2012 but with the play of Michael Russell at shortstop and the return of first baseman Cody Stubbs, second baseman Mike Zolk and third baseman Colin Moran the Tar Heels have committed 12 fewer errors this season for a .975 mark.
- The .975 mark would go down as the second-highest mark in school history and currently ranks second the ACC and 32nd in the NCAA.

*CWS Championship Series

#41 Kent Emanuel Junior, LHP 6-4 • 225 Woodstock, Ga. Woodstock

• Will be making his 49th career start, seventh in the NCAA Tournament and second in the College World Series.

• ACC Pitcher of the Year

- Golden Spikes Award and Dick Howser Trophy Semifinalist
- Owns the 10th-best winning percentage in school history at .778 (28-8)
- Boasts the 9th-lowest career ERA in school history with a 2.43 mark
- Has pitched more innings than any junior in school history (337.1) and has eclipsed the 100-inning mark for the third straight year.
- Set the wins record for a junior with his 28th in UNC's win over Towson.
- Was unable to make it through the third in the super regional opener against South Carolina (6/8) but was able to bounce back and record the final two outs in the series clincher (6/11) for his first career save.
- Struck out eight batters against Towson to claim his 11th win of the year before making a relief appearance against Florida Atlantic in Monday night's regional final.
- Recorded his seventh career complete game and fourth career shutout as he threw 8 scoreless innings against Miami in the ACC Tournament.
- Lost back-to-back games for the first time in his career as Virginia knocked the junior out after five innings, his shortest start of the year.
- Lost his second game of the season as he struck out six and walked just one but allowed a walk-off home run at Georgia Tech (5/10).
- Improved to 9-1 with eight 1-run inning at NC State (4/26). Matched a career high with 9 strikeouts in the win over the Wolfpack.
- Claimed win No. 8 with a complete game showing against Duke (4/20). Matched a season-high with eight strike outs, while surrendering just one run on two hits.
- Went eight inning for the sixth time this season in the win at Virginia Tech (4/12). Surrendered a career-high eight runs, six earned, and 14 hits against the Hokies but settled in to earn his seventh win of the year.
- Improved to 6-0 on the year with eight innings of two-run ball against Maryland (4/5). Struck out six and limited the Terps to three hits in the win
- Scattered nine hits over eight one-run innings versus Clemson (3/30). Earned his fifth win of the year as he struck out five against the Tigers.
- Carried a no-hitter into the fifth inning against Boston College (3/23). Picked up his fourth win of the year with eight scoreless frames against the Eagles.
- Suffered his first loss of the year and sixth of his career when he allowed four runs over 6.1 innings against Miami (3/15). The Canes have saddled Emanuel with three of his six career losses.
- Earned his 20th career victory with his second shutout of the season at Wake Forest (3/8). Struck out seven over his nine innings of work against the Demon Deacons.
- The shutout was the second of the season for Emanuel and the third of his career. Became the first Tar Heel since Robert Woodard in 2006 to throw two shutouts in the same season.
- Matched Rice's Austin Kubitz in the opener of the Astros Foundation College Classic with seven innings of one-run ball. Struck out five but did

#29 Hobbs Johnson Junior, LHP 5-11 • 210 Rocky Mount, N.C. Rocky Mount

- Will be making his 24th career start and fourth start in the NCAA Tournament.
- Suffered his first loss of the year and of his postseason career in the second game of the super regional against South Carolina (6/9) as he surrendered five runs on five hits in 1.2 innings of work.

• Carried a no hitter into the seventh inning against Florida Atlantic (6/2) but was saddled with a no decision. Made his first relief appearance of the year in the regional final game against FAU (6/3) walking the only man he faced.

• Matched NC State's Carlos Rodon pitch-for-pitch in the ACC Tournament. Matched a season high with nine strikeouts in a no decision.

• Earned a hard-luck line of three runs despite allowing only two hits against Virginia (5/18).

• Departed having allowed one run but a pair of inherited runners came around to score. Retired 19 in a row after allowing a run in the first inning against the Cavaliers.

• Had not allowed a run in his last four starts dating back to April 7 against Maryland, a stretch of 27.2 innings before surrendering a run at Georgia Tech.

• Owns an ERA of 0.32 in his last five starts (1 ER in 28 IP)

• Did not factor into the decision as he allowed one run in 4.2 innings at Georgia Tech (5/12)

• Earned a second consecutive midweek win as he allowed one hit but five walks over five scoreless innings. Struck out four as he improved to 4-0 on the year.

• Set a new season high with nine strikeouts in five innings of work against The Citadel (5/1). Allowed just two hits to the Bulldogs.

• Turned in his best start of the season against Duke (4/21) as he tossed 7.1 scoreless frames to earn his second win of the year. Scattered six hits on the day, while striking out four.

• Earned his first win of the season Sunday at Virginia Tech (4/14). Threw six scoreless innings and surrendered just two hits against the Hokies.

• Allowed a career-high four runs, two earned, in a no decision against Maryland (4/7). Struck out three and walked three against the Terps.

• Struck out four in a season-long 5.1 innings of work against Clemson (4/1). Did not factor in his sixth-straight decision despite departing with a 3-1 lead against the Tigers.

• Allowed two runs over five innings of work in a no decision against VCU (3/26). Struck out five in the extra-inning win for the Tar Heels.

• Struck out a season-high seven over five innings of work against Miami (3/17), his longest outing of the year.
• Surrendered just one run on three hits against the Hurricanes.

• Was on a pitch count of 80 in a no decision at Wake Forest (3/10). Struck out a season-high six batters at Wake Forest and issued just one walk over four innings of work.

• Will be making his 33rd career start on fourth in the NCAA Tournament.

• Earned Freshman All-America honors a year ago.

• Named CoSIDA Academic All-District

• Started the super regional decider against South Carolina (6/11) and struck out two in 2.1 innings of work.

• Worked into the fifth in UNC's NCAA Tournament opener against Canisius (5/31) but did not factor into the decision as he allowed three runs. Also made a relief appearance in the regional final.

• Did not factor into the decision against Clemson (5/24) in the ACC Tournament, despite pitching into the sixth inning for the third straight start.

• Pitched into the sixth inning for the fourth time in his last five starts but registered a no decision against Virginia (5/17). Struck out four and did not walk a batter but surrendered four runs on eight hits.

• Turned in his best start of the year at Georgia Tech (5/11) as he allowed just two hits during eight scoreless innings.

• Struck out five and allowed two walks in his eighth win of the year.

• Suffered his first loss of the year at NC State (4/27) as he allowed six runs, five earned, on eight hits. He struck out two but walked three in 4.1 innings of work.

• Surrendered just one run on five hits en route to his seventh win of the year against Duke (4/20). Struck out six Blue Devils in his 6.2 innings of work.

• Struck out seven at Virginia Tech (4/13) in a no decision. Allowed a career-most six runs on nine hits against the Hokies.

• Was pulled after 3.2 innings of three-run ball against Maryland (4/6). Walked three and allowed five hits against the Terps.

• Had his streak of a win in every start this season end when rain shortened his start against Clemson (3/30). Struck out six of the nine batters he faced against Clemson before the rain came.

• Threw an inning of hitless relief at UNC Wilmington (4/3) on his bullpen day after earning his league-best sixth win of the year against Boston College (3/23). Allowed two runs, one earned, over seven innings of work in the doubleheader nightcap against the Eagles.

• Earned ACC Pitcher of the Week honors as he carried a no hitter into the sixth inning against Miami (3/16). Picked up the win at Wake Forest (3/9) after getting 14 runs of support. Struck out seven Demon Deacons but surrendered a season-high four runs

Triangle Rivalry Takes On National Scope

January 24, 2013 by Aaron Fitt (<http://www.baseballamerica.com/author/aaronfitt/>)

For 11 gripping innings, North Carolina and North Carolina State wrestled to a scoreless tie, and the 10,229 baseball-loving souls crammed into Greensboro's NewBridge Bank Park hung on every pitch.

It was May 26, 2012, and it was a watershed moment for America's Pastime in the Old North State.

Never before had so many people witnessed a college baseball game in North Carolina—not even close. The previous record was 6,956, set during an Atlantic Coast Conference tournament game between UNC and Clemson in Durham in 2009. The previous record for an ACC tournament game in any state was 8,503, set in South Carolina in 1989.

North Carolina is, first and foremost, a basketball state, just as the ACC's national reputation is that of a basketball conference. Traditionally, sports fans in the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill Triangle don't turn their attention to baseball until after the hoops tournament ends in April, and they never show up for college baseball games in droves like fans do in the Deep South, Texas or South Carolina.

But UNC has built a baseball powerhouse under Mike Fox, reaching the College World Series five times in the past seven years and raising the sport's profile in the region. N.C. State has been consistently good under Elliott Avent, making 12 regionals in 16 years, but the Wolfpack made a sudden jump from good to great last year, and fans took notice.

So college baseball had been gaining momentum for years in North Carolina, but it reached a crescendo last May 26, when two rivals with legitimate national title aspirations met on a beautiful Saturday night in the final game of ACC tournament pool play. The atmosphere was electric, a product of the nearly even blending of light blue shirts with red shirts throughout the stadium.

And the game was worthy of the moment.

"That atmosphere against Carolina was unbelievable. I wish we could play under that every game," Rodon recalled. "That was crazy—it was insane. I've never played in a game like that. Sometimes when I'm pitching I don't notice it, then you hear the crowd going crazy, and it was so loud, you just get chills."

North Carolina's own talented freshman, Benton Moss, stood toe-to-toe with Rodon into the sixth, allowing just two hits. Then UNC's stellar bullpen took over and kept the Wolfpack off the scoreboard through the 12th, when the Tar Heels finally broke through with four runs to secure a 4-0 win.

Fans of both teams filed out feeling fulfilled and exhilarated, judging by the buzz that persisted all the way into the parking lot. It was a sublime college baseball experience—and given the strength of these two programs, there is reason to believe that evening in May was not the pinnacle for the sport in North Carolina, but simply the beginning of a new golden age.

"We're always going to be in the shadow here of college basketball—we just are. And that's OK," Fox said. "I do think it's exciting when 10,000 people can go to Greensboro to watch State and Carolina play a baseball game. Then you hope that out of those 10,000 people, it swells to even more than that by word of mouth—people talking about what a good game it was, how talented the players were on the field."

Keep It Going Downhill

The talent on the field, of course, is the driving force behind college baseball's surge in the Triangle. The Tar Heels and Wolfpack have two of the most loaded rosters in the nation this year, and they enter the season ranked No. 1 and No. 8, respectively, in the Baseball America Top 25.

For North Carolina, 2013 figures to be simply the continuation of a remarkable run of excellence that began in 2006. Prior to that season, the Tar Heels hadn't been to Omaha since 1989, though they had been consistently solid—much like the Wolfpack has been in the last decade.

But in 2006, UNC's top-ranked 2003 recruiting class reached maturation, as future big leaguers Andrew Miller and Daniel Bard led the Tar Heels all the way to the College World Series Finals. That class raised the bar for UNC, making it easier to attract more marquee players—like righthanders Alex White and Matt Harvey—in subsequent recruiting classes. Less heralded recruits Dustin Ackley and Kyle Seager would become college superstars en route to the big leagues, strengthening UNC's brand along the way.

But for all their five trips to Omaha and two appearances in the Finals, the Tar Heels have never been BA's preseason No. 1 until now. Just as Miller, Bard, Josh Horton, Robert Woodard and others handed the torch to Ackley, Seager and White, so too did Harvey, Levi Michael and their teammates hand off to Colin Moran and Kent Emanuel—the pillars of UNC's current junior class.

Moran earned national Freshman of the Year honors in 2011, when he helped a UNC team that began the season unranked get back to Omaha. Though he grew up in New York, Moran is well versed in the history of UNC baseball, because his uncle is former UNC great B.J. Surhoff, and his older brother Brian was a star reliever for the Tar Heels from 2007-09. By the time the younger Moran arrived in Chapel Hill, the standards for the program had changed dramatically from where they were a decade earlier.

"I definitely think there's a high expectation to win, and an expectation to get to Omaha," Moran said. "Obviously that's everybody's goal. Having a chance to watch my brother, for however many years they were in that streak, you grow up watching them on TV going to Omaha, and it builds expectations a little bit."

Which made last year's stunning loss to St. John's in the Chapel Hill Regional even more difficult to digest. Emanuel, the ace lefthander, fronted one of the nation's best pitching staffs in 2012, featuring three weekend starters who posted sub-2.00 ERAs. The Tar Heels survived Moran's broken hand—suffered when he vented his frustration by punching a door during the first game of the N.C. State series—and headed into the postseason as one of the leading contenders for the national title.

But in UNC's second game of the regional, a plucky, talented St. John's team rallied for three runs in the bottom of the ninth against All-American closer Michael Morin to send the Tar Heels into the loser's bracket. The Red Storm got the better of UNC's vaunted bullpen again a day later to send the top seed packing.

"I definitely think it was a good year last year, but it was kind of a bitter ending," Moran said. "All the returning players, you can definitely sense that maybe there's a little extra motivation, not that there already wasn't motivation. I think obviously last year was a real good team, but this is definitely the most talented team that I've been on since I've been here. It's really hard-working."

All three weekend starters are back, headlining perhaps the nation's deepest pitching staff. The lineup is experienced and figures to be more potent than it was a year ago. The next wave of UNC stars—led by freshmen Landon Lassiter and Skye Bolt—has arrived and is expected to bolster the offense as well as the defense. And in the long term, this freshman class looks equal to the challenge of maintaining UNC's high standards after Moran, Emanuel and co. are gone.

"We all know recruiting's the name of the game. You're not going to win it without talented players—you're just not going to do it consistently," Fox said. "We've been fortunate in that regard; coach (Scott) Jackson and coach (Scott) Forbes have worked tirelessly at that end. We'll see with this freshman class, two years from now, if I'm able to speak in that regard with those guys like we're talking with Emanuel and Moran and those guys."

Creating New Momentum

Without question, North Carolina State fielded the nation's best group of freshmen last year, and that class has a chance to impact the program in a way comparable to how Miller and Bard's class affected UNC. Rodon, infielder Trea Turner and outfielder Jake Fincher all earned freshman All-America honors last year. Catcher Brett Austin, an unsigned supplemental first-round pick out of high school, is just scratching the surface of his ability, and the same can be said for flame-throwing righthander Logan Jernigan. And versatile second baseman/outfielder Logan Ratledge emerged as another key building block last year, giving that class depth as well as star power.

"I think we've had a really, really good program for a number of years, but I think these core players we have that made up last year's recruiting class, they elevate the program, and I think they stabilize the program," Avent said. "They give you that stabilization that gives you the sense we'll be good for a long time to come. The people they've attracted to play with them, the recruiting class of freshmen that came in this year, the class we have next year, we feel like might be a product of how this class elevated the program a little bit."

Rodon's burning desire to be great is part of what makes him great, and he's keenly aware of his opportunity to leave his mark at N.C. State. That's one of the reasons the native of nearby Holly Springs, N.C., chose the Wolfpack.

"I took one visit to Carolina, and I thought it was a nice school, but I thought it was a little too much for me," he said. "I wanted to go somewhere and hopefully help improve a program. My senior year I thought, 'Hopefully I can make this program better.' I like being the underdog, because it's a challenge. People are like, 'You can't do that—you can't show up and make that program better.' I didn't make us better; it took all 35 of us last year, and the bullpen catchers and equipment managers, everyone, to make us that successful."

Avent said he recognized halfway through the season that his team had special chemistry. Suddenly, his players figured out how good they were, and they started to believe they could win every time they took the field.

As N.C. State started reeling off wins, baseball became a featured attraction in Raleigh. Fans flocked to Doak Field to see Rodon dominate hitters with his blazing fastball and devastating slider. They were electrified by Turner's impossible speed, which helped him lead the nation with 57 stolen bases in 61 tries. That duo helped make N.C. State one of most fun teams to watch in college baseball last year.

"I myself am on Twitter, and I see a lot of people tweeting at our baseball account and how excited they are," said Turner, who moves from third base to shortstop as a sophomore. "It gives us more motivation, because we really haven't had a lot of fan support in the past. Now I think they're buying into what we're doing."

The Wolfpack went 19-11 in the ACC and easily earned a home regional, which it won by running through the loser's bracket and beating red-hot Vanderbilt in back-to-back thrillers. That earned N.C. State a trip to Gainesville to take on No. 1 national seed Florida in super regionals. The older Gators won the series, but the Wolfpack fought hard in a back-and-forth second game, falling 9-8 in 10 innings.

"That burns real deep, especially to lose to a team that, to me, isn't that much better than us," Rodon said. "Obviously their pitching is amazing, but when we were on that field, it didn't seem that different at all. They're not as good as they thought they were, but they're obviously a great team. I've never been in that situation before. Now when our whole team gets in that situation again, hopefully we can be successful. Now all the freshmen, we know what it's like, what to expect."

N.C. State has now made three trips to super regionals since 2003, but it has been to Omaha only once in its history—way back in 1968. Rodon, Turner and Avent know how much it would mean for the program to break through to the CWS this year.

"They say the hardest thing to do is to get there the first time," Avent said.

But once a program breaks down the door, it becomes easier to return in following seasons, as North Carolina can attest. The Tar Heels have become Omaha regulars, to the point that their absence last year raised eyebrows.

"It is funny how things have changed, and of course that's what you want," Fox said. "People come up to you and say, 'Gosh, I was expecting to see y'all in Omaha.' Well, so were we. But that's OK; that's why you do so much work and put this time and effort in, is you want these expectations."

This time around, the Tar Heels and Wolfpack enter the season with similar expectations—and that has raised the stakes in this rivalry. The showdown in Greensboro might have been a classic, but just wait for the encore, with the ACC Tournament scheduled for Durham Bulls Athletic Park, nearly halfway between the geographic rivals.

"It's funny, because being from Florida I didn't really know too much about either N.C. State or Carolina before I got here," Turner said. "Now that I'm here, it's like you just don't like them because they're wearing Carolina stuff. But after the ACC tournament game when they beat us, a lot of their guys were very nice going through the (handshake) lines."

"But it's getting a little crazy now that we're both top teams, and it means more."

Former Knight excels at UNC

By Corey Inscoe

North Carolina freshman pitcher Trent Thornton made his first appearance on the mound in the Tar Heels' second game of the season. The Ardrey Kell graduate came in during the sixth inning against Seton Hall.

He gave up a home run to the first batter he faced.

"Baseball is a game of failure," Thornton said. "It's how you react to it."

He reacted well.

Thornton, a right-hander, is 7-0 in five starts and 10 appearances this year for the Tar Heels (31-2 through April 11), ranked No. 1 in several national polls. He has a 0.60 ERA, has struck out 35 batters and walked just five.

That first home run is the only one he's given up this year.

"It's what I wanted to do. I wanted to come in immediately and have a huge impact on the team," Thornton said.

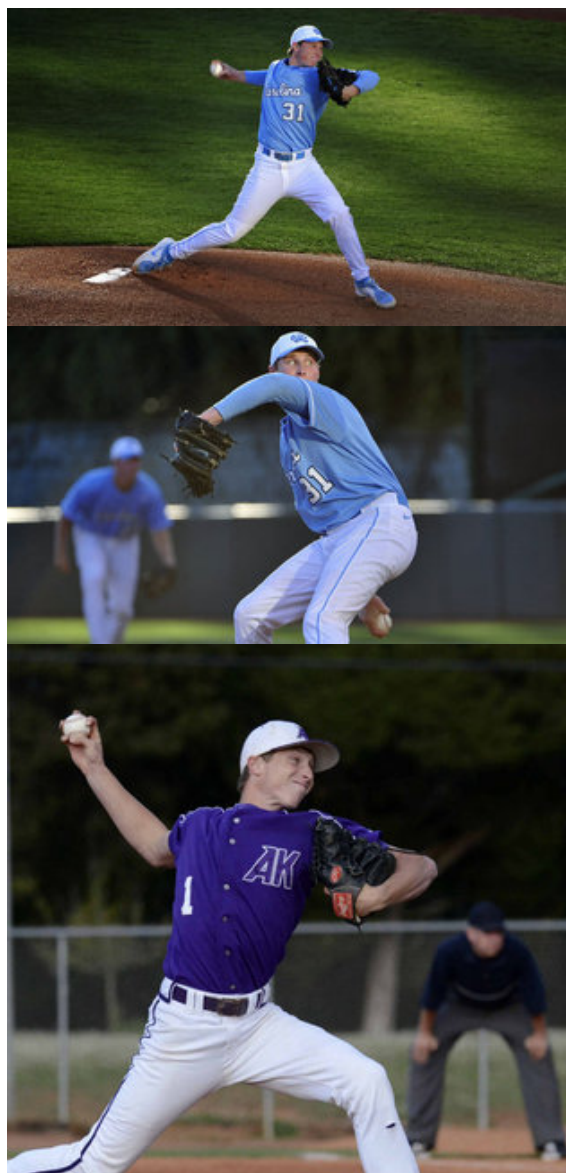

Thornton saw his first ACC action and got his first conference win against Clemson on April 1, pitching the last 6.1 innings in a rain-delayed game that started the day before. He allowed six hits, no earned runs and had seven strikeouts.

Thornton, who spent most of his high school career as a starter, has played every pitching role for the Tar Heels. He earned a save April 6 against Maryland (one inning, two strikeouts) and followed that with a win in relief against Maryland the next day, pitching the final 4.1 innings and not giving up a run.

In the same game, he had a single in his first at bat since high school.

“I started my hitting career hitting 1.000,” he said. “It’s probably going to end that way, too.”

Hal Bagwell, Thornton’s high school coach at Ardrey Kell, wasn’t sure if his former player would get a chance to contribute this early in his college career, but he knew Thornton had the ability.

“He’s unbelievable, man. He really is,” said Bagwell, who has coached at Ardrey Kell since the school opened in 2006. “He’s just got it. I don’t know how to explain it.”

Bagwell recalls Thornton coming up to varsity as a sophomore. He hit a double in his first at bat and stayed in the starting lineup for the rest of his high school career.

Thornton was the Southwestern 4A co-player of the year and made the N.C. Baseball Coaches Association all-state team after his senior season. He was 8-1 on the mound that year, with a 1.05 ERA and 119 strikeouts.

Thornton isn’t very big, standing 6-foot and weighing just 170 pounds (Bagwell calls him “Skinny”), but the coach said he works hard to prove that he can play with anyone.

North Carolina head baseball coach Mike Fox “will never have to motivate him,” Bagwell said. “I never had to motivate him. He internally motivates himself.”

Thornton’s fastball is consistently in the low-to-mid-90s and he can throw four pitches for strikes: a fastball, change up, slider and curveball, pitches he developed with Ardrey Kell pitching coach Ray Korn.

Thornton isn’t the only Ardrey Kell graduate pitching well for the Tar Heels. Sophomore Chris McCue is 5-0 in 11 relief appearances, with a 1.44 ERA and 23 strikeouts.

Thornton said McCue has helped him adjust to the college game.

“Just like at Ardrey Kell, he’s taken me under his wing here, taken me through the process, helping me when I need help and just showing me what college baseball is all about,” Thornton said.

Two other former Mecklenburg County players are regular starters for North Carolina. Junior Brian Holberton (Myers Park) is batting .333 with five home runs and 25 RBIs and sophomore Michael Russell (Hopewell) is hitting .291 with seven doubles and two triples.

The Tar Heels won their first 16 games of the season and have only two losses, to Miami and Clemson.

“As a team, we’ve been gelling ever since the start,” Thornton said. “All the guys play really well together and, really, it all comes down to everyone truly wants to win. It’s a great group of guys up here that all play together.”

Thornton started his first game Feb. 27 against St. John’s.

“I just remember going out to the bullpen like, ‘Oh, this is real. I’m about to start my first collegiate game,’ ” he said.

Thorton said his walk-out song – “Seven Nation Army” by the White Stripes – played and he got goose bumps while on the mound. He pitched four innings in the win, giving up four hits and two runs, neither earned.

Bagwell expects Thornton to be starting many more games at North Carolina. He told Fox as much when the coach was recruiting Thornton.

“I said, ‘Coach Fox, you’re going to have a future All-American in him.’ That’s how special I think that kid is,” Bagwell said. “He’s going to make his mark at the University of North Carolina.”

Brian Holberton isn't just a utility man.

Yes, he's plugged whatever hole the No. 1 North Carolina baseball team has needed to fill this season — including playing catcher in an extra-inning game in which the Tar Heels burned their top two players at the position.

But a utility man doesn't just jump into the most important spots in the batting order.

"He's been the key to our team," coach Mike Fox said. "That kid'll play anywhere, hit anywhere in the lineup. He's having a sensational year."

Twice this year, important Tar Heel bats have gone down — first Chaz Frank, UNC's leadoff hitter, with a hamstring injury, then Skye Bolt, the cleanup hitter, with a broken foot.

And twice this year, Holberton has stepped up. The junior outfielder batted leadoff in every game Frank missed, and he's hitting cleanup now that Bolt's out of the lineup.

"I've done it my whole life, really — high school, middle school — I've been in every position," Holberton said. "Here, it's second nature, I guess."

In UNC's sweep of Duke this weekend, Holberton went 5-for-12, homered twice and drove in six runs.

The first home run, a solo shot to dead center field in the series opener, was the Tar Heels' first run-scoring hit of the weekend. They had scored three runs earlier in the game on a hit batsman, a wild pitch and a passed ball.

The second, a three-run homer to right, was the game-winning hit of the series finale. It came in the first inning, but the three runs were more than enough for UNC in a 10-1 blowout.

Wherever he bats, Holberton produces. In his six games as the leadoff man, he went 13-for-27, batting nearly .500. And as the four-hitter, he's batted .345 in seven games so far.

More importantly, he's adapted to the responsibilities of the different positions. A leadoff hitter's job is to get on base and score runs, and at the top of the order, Holberton scored 12 times — an average of twice per game.

Frank said Holberton has been instrumental in keeping the team's 14-game winning streak alive.

"I've been leading off for this team for three years, and I've never missed a game until this year," Frank said. "And for Holbie to step in and be that catalyst for the team was huge for our stretch that we've had of late."

A cleanup hitter has to hit for power and drive runs in, and Holberton has homered three times and driven in nine runs in his seven games in the four-hole.

"When I was hitting leadoff, I would hit singles," Holberton said. "And I'm taking the same swing, and I'm in the four-hole, and now I'm hitting doubles. So it may be something mental, and I don't know about it, but it's just crazy."

Frank and Bolt both have big shoes to fill. Frank sparks the North Carolina offense, and Bolt was having an all-star season before he got hurt.

Luckily for UNC, Holberton has some big feet.

North Carolina Outlasts N.C. State in 18

<http://www.baseballamerica.com/college/north-carolina-outlasts-n-c-state-in-18/>

June 12, 2013

John Manuel, Baseball America

DURHAM, N.C.—North Carolina and rival N.C. State played an epic 12-inning classic in the 2012 Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, with more than 10,000 fans packing Greensboro's NewBridge Bank Park. North Carolina won that one 4-0, but the real winner was college baseball in the Tar Heel State, which gained new currency and significance.

The buildup for 2013 started with BA's College Preview Issue, which featured the Wolfpack's Carlos Rodon and Trea Turner and the Tar Heels' Colin Moran and Kent Emanuel on the cover. They came to the Durham Bulls Athletic Park on a cold January day for the photo shoot, joked with each other and, as Turner admitted, realized the other team's players were "all right guys."

The buildup continued through an inconclusive April series in Raleigh, with the teams splitting the first two games before the third one was rained out. It came to fruition this week, when the ACC tournament bracket set up with UNC as the No. 1 seed and N.C. State as the No. 4 seed, guaranteeing a matchup. It was set for Saturday night and lived up to its billing.

Rodon did his part in a masterful performance. The crowd did its part, with 11,392 fans showing up to break last year's ACC tournament (and state of North Carolina college baseball record) for attendance. But the hitters didn't do theirs, as the game stretched past 1 a.m. and became the longest game in ACC tourney history.

"When we were here in January," Rodon said after the game was over early Sunday morning, "I wasn't expecting 18 innings."

Finally, in the 18th inning, North Carolina broke through with a run, as Cody Stubbs delivered a bloop single that scored Landon Lassiter with the go-ahead run. The Wolfpack got a runner to third with none out in the bottom of the 18th, but Chris Munnely got two popouts and a groundout to squelch the threat as the Tar Heels held on for a 2-1 victory.

"I saw some of the best baseball I've ever seen," North Carolina coach Mike Fox said, "and I saw some of the worst. You guys can look at the box score and figure it out."

The teams combined for 43 strikeouts—22 by N.C. State pitchers, 21 by North Carolina. The Wolfpack left 17 runners on base while the Tar Heels left 14. As UNC outfielder Chaz Frank said, "It felt like nobody wanted to win the ballgame."

Pitching dominated the game on a dark night at DBAP with a full moon and a big strike zone. Rodon was masterful in setting the tone. He didn't allow a baserunner until walking Cody Stubbs in the fifth, didn't allow a hit until Stubbs singled in the seventh, and mowed down the Tar Heels over 10 innings. N.C. State coach Elliott Avent said it was as well as he's ever seen Rodon pitch, and the numbers back it up: 10 innings, one hit, two walks and 14 strikeouts in 130 pitches for the national strikeout leader.

But his defense—him included—betrayed him in the eighth as North Carolina tied the score. Rodon walked Mike Zolk with one out, and after an error on third baseman Grant Clyde, the Tar Heels had runners on first-and-second. Chaz Frank grounded to first baseman Tarran Senay, and Senay initially looked to go to second base before throwing to Rodon covering at first. The throw got by Rodon, who was charged with the error. Zolk scored from second and the game was tied, as it would remain until the 18th.

"I learned a lesson on that play," Rodon said. "I'll never take my eye off the ball again. I was looking for the double play and I had my eye on Tarran . . . the ball got on me quick and got away from me."

N.C. State had taken a 1-0 lead in the sixth when Senay and Grant Clyde hit back-to-back doubles off Hobbs Johnson with one out in the sixth.

But neither team could push runs across for several hours as the bullpens dominated. North Carolina freshman righthander Trent Thornton was nearly as impressive as Rodon, throwing 6.1 innings without giving up a hit while striking out seven. He threw 91 pitches in his longest outing as a reliever. Thornton began the year as a starter and topped out at 102 pitches against Princeton, but that was on March 19.

Chris McCue also gave UNC three scoreless innings, working out of a bases-loaded jam in the 13th by striking out Clyde and Brett Williams. Munnely earned the victory with three scoreless innings, getting a popout to right field, a pop to second base and a groundout to end the game and strand Brett Williams at third base after a leadoff double and wild pitch.

"It was so late," Munnely said, "my nerves went to sleep."

The game lasted too long, stretching 6 hours, 3 minutes. N.C. State sophomore catcher Brett Austin caught all 18 innings, as he's caught virtually every inning for the team this season. Brian Holberton put in 18 innings for UNC—nine in left field, sandwiched around nine as the catcher in the middle innings. Lassiter scored the winning run after striking out in his first five at-bats, while N.C. State No. 9 hitter Logan Ratledge was the only starter who didn't strike out on the night.

But there was excellence as well. Veteran Durham Bulls officials like longtime PA announcer Bill Law and George Habel, the vice president of the sports group at Capitol Broadcasting (which owns the Triple-A franchise), said they couldn't remember the ballpark as loud or as alive. The Wolfpack and Tar Heels fans acquitted themselves well, with many staying to the end, a bitter end for a Wolfpack team looking to make it to the College World Series for the first time since 1968. Avent said it could be the kind of loss, with the missed opportunities and mistakes, that helps N.C. State in its quest to get back to Omaha, that helps it pay more attention to details it missed in this epic game.

The Tar Heels won't have time to mull their mistakes over. They had less than 10 hours to get ready to play Virginia Tech for the ACC championship.

Bolt returns to electrify lineup

By David Adler | The Daily Tar Heel

Updated: 05/24/13 1:56am

If there's an ideal baseball player, Skye Bolt is made in his image.

The 6-foot-3, switch-hitting North Carolina freshman already has the aura of a pro, that nebulous "it" factor. It's in his fearlessness hitting with two strikes, his ability to take pitches just off the plate like they're two feet outside, his knack for coming up with clutch hits.

Bolt sprays hits to all fields, in all counts. He has home-run power from both sides of the plate. He's fast, he locks down center field, and he has the arm to throw runners out at any base. That's average, power, speed, defense and arm strength — baseball's five tools, the marks of a player who can do everything.

"There aren't many five-tool players out there that can put them all to use," said Jay Hood, Bolt's baseball tutor throughout his teenage years. "But Skye can show every tool in the same game. That's when you know he's locked in — he just takes over a game."

He's taken over a number this season. The Georgia native is hitting .363, and he was at .392 before missing a month due to injury. He has six home runs and 45 RBIs batting cleanup for the country's No. 6 team — a lineup position it took him just two games to take over. He's 9-for-11 stealing bases, he's made diving catches, and opposing third-base coaches have held runners against his arm.

Heading into the ACC tournament today, UNC holds the top seed, and the Tar Heels are a favorite to reach Omaha — but they're backing into the playoffs after consecutive series losses. So it would help if a now-healthy Bolt, who started last Tuesday for the first time since April 12, took over a few more.

Bolt is quick to credit God for blessing him with his talent. He's a religious guy, and he doesn't want to take his gifts for granted. And he knows tools alone don't build a major leaguer.

"You've got to utilize all your tools and make them skills," Bolt said. "If that's the word or report — five-tool player — then I need to become a skilled five-tool player."

Bolt reluctantly admitted he's a five-tool player, but ask him if he's a skilled five-tool player, and there's no hesitation. The answer's no.

Bolt said he has to make better baserunning reads and not rely on raw speed. He can't look in pitches with his head — it throws off his perception of the zone and hurts his power. And he needs to quiet down his lefty stance. His father, Mike, has burned the words into his mind — "Quiet... quiet... explode!" — but it's not his natural side, and he's still too violent.

But Bolt's always been willing to adjust. It's how he got to the upper echelon of college players, with his sights set on the MLB.

"When he was younger, there were some tools there, but he had a long way to go," Hood said. "There were certainly a lot of holes that I saw. But it was really rewarding to see how hard he worked."

The hours in the cage and weight room have never been a question for Bolt, just necessary stops on the road to where he knows he's going.

That road started on a 50-foot basepath.

"Since I was in tee-ball, my dad was taping up the wrists," Bolt said. "I was into it, you know. I had the batting gloves, wristband, was always in the dirt."

Bolt can pinpoint the moment he knew he was a ballplayer — his first home run, which bounced over the fence.

"I was rounding second like it went over," he recalled. "And they said, 'Just let him go.'"

He hasn't stopped.

Bolt in the blue

Bolt ambles into the UNC student union, a walking boot on his foot and a smile on his face.

It's April 16, and he's just learned that he'll be out four weeks with a fractured metatarsal. It's an unlucky injury — a ball somehow fouled off his back foot. But hobbling around campus, Bolt is still smiling. Coach Mike Fox called that smile his best quality — not his baseball talent, not the confidence he oozes on and off the field.

"I have never seen him — knock on wood — I've never seen him when he hasn't had a bounce to his step and a smile on his face," Fox said. "And that's rare."

If a broken foot can't get rid of that smile, maybe Fox can stop knocking. Even right after the injury, Bolt wasn't down on himself — he was mad, and he was focused.

"(I'm) just pissed," Bolt said in a text message that night. "I'll come back stronger."

His first at-bat after the injury, Bolt singled. His first time on the bases after a broken foot, he stole second. He's resilient, and he moves on quickly. He knows in a game where it's been 72 years since a major-league hitter succeeded 40 percent of the time, he's going to fail. Sometimes badly.

Like on April 1, Bolt's worst day at UNC. That Monday, in a doubleheader against Clemson, Bolt went 0-for-7 and grounded out to end the second game with the winning runs in scoring position. He was swinging through 75-mph hangers like they were 100-mph heat.

His next at-bat, two days later, Bolt went yard.

His coaches say that's typical. And Juerod Roberts in particular, who coached a 17-year-old Bolt in travel ball with the East Cobb Braves, has the story to prove it.

At a tournament in Florida that summer, Bolt — who Roberts called the centerpiece of that team — got drilled in the arm by a pitch in the quarterfinals. It swelled up so much, he couldn't grip a bat.

By the semifinals, it wasn't better. Bolt couldn't swing. So Roberts told him to fake-bunt, all at-bat, every at-bat. After all, Bolt was a well-known, respected player. Teams pitched him carefully. And East Cobb's opponents never knew he couldn't swing.

"The first at-bat? Fake bunt. The full at-bat," Roberts said with a laugh. "And can you believe he walked?"

Bolt walked twice in that game. He didn't swing once. The Braves advanced, but the finals were the same day, they were playing a loaded Florida team, and their centerpiece could still barely hold a bat.

Roberts, who calls Bolt his brother, told Skye to be careful, that his career outweighed one tournament. So Bolt didn't even swing in batting practice. But in the second inning, he decided to cut loose. And Roberts said he'll never forget what happened next.

"How about, first pitch — pow! Over the scoreboard."

East Cobb won the tournament.

"You know, he never complained. He never grimaced," Roberts said. "We have those players where if something's wrong with them, they've got to show it.

"But that was never Skye. He'd be a leader."

Bolt, electric

It's March 17, two days after Miami handed UNC its first loss of 2013, and Bolt draws a cross in the dirt and steps to the plate against the Hurricanes. And with two outs in the eighth inning of a 1-1 game, Bolt launches the series-winning three-run homer deep into the Chapel Hill night — his biggest hit of the year.

Bolt draws that cross with his bat every at bat. It carries a lot of weight.

"There are several meanings behind the cross," said Bolt's father, Mike. "Giving him balance, giving him confidence. Strength. Security. Safety."

Skye started drawing it at age 15, when he got serious about switch-hitting. He had never batted lefty in a game, so he turned to God.

"I was like, 'I'm gonna need your help on this one,'" Bolt said. "Because it was my first time doing it, you know? That's where the cross came from."

But the roots of Bolt's switch-hitting run deeper, back to Woodstock, Ga., where he grew up watching the Atlanta Braves. Bolt idolized switch-hitting Chipper Jones, and Chipper made his way into Skye's game — in his home run trot, his visible confidence, his left-handed stance and swing.

"You've got to see my dorm room now," Bolt said. "I've got all the articles from this past year, anything he's said as far as style and approach to hitting."

Playing in his backyard and mimicking Jones, a young Bolt turned into a switch-hitter. Too strong on his right side to comfortably swing a wiffleball bat, he developed a whip-like lefty swing that internalized Chipper's tendencies.

To this day, there are traces of that swing in Bolt's bat tilt. Of course, it's evolved since then, with the help of his dad — a former college ballplayer — and hitting coaches. Bolt even hit lefty his entire 16-year-old season to eliminate the gap between sides.

The next year, his junior year of high school, everything came together. Bolt started to look like the player he is now. So that summer, when Roberts recruited his team, Bolt was the first player he approached.

East Cobb has one of the best travel programs in the country. Roberts said it has about 25 alumni currently on MLB active rosters. Players like Jason Heyward, Brandon Phillips and Buster Posey all passed through East Cobb.

"The thing about it is, you only get the opportunity to coach a Skye Bolt every so often," Roberts said. "He's a special kid."

By now, Bolt's left side has caught up to the point that teammate Colin Moran, an elite left-handed hitter, said halfway through the season, he didn't know it wasn't Bolt's natural side.

But Bolt's childhood isn't always hidden behind the grown ballplayer. It crops up now and then, like when Bolt posed for the cover of Scope, a UNC fashion magazine, in February. Bolt's mom runs a modeling agency, and he was a child model.

"I guess I was a cute kid," Bolt joked. "But I got to the age of about 10, and my buddies at school were giving me heck about it. And I decided I was gonna be an athlete, and I told my mom, 'I've got to stop doing this.'"

And sometimes, Bolt's upbringing sneaks into the ballpark. In a game against Maryland, Bolt lined a foul ball into the Boshamer Stadium stands that hit a fan in the arm. That night, he autographed a baseball — "Get well soon. Skye Bolt" — and made sure she got it.

After another game, Bolt's dad gave him $20 out of his wallet. Skye's friend Hannah was visiting him that weekend, and as Mike watched them walk away, he turned to his wife Connie and said, "You know where that money's going, right? He's gonna give it to Hannah for gas." Before they turned the corner, Mike saw Skye hand Hannah the 20.

"It was the right thing to do," Skye said, downplaying the gesture. "The small things, right?"

On top of those isolated moments, there are the everyday signs, like the cross and Bolt's kneeling pregame prayers on the third-base line. The residue of his early years permeates Bolt's game — not just in the tics in his stance and swing, but in the way he plays the sport.

"He relishes being on the field and playing — and playing like a little kid, playing like a Little Leaguer," Fox said. "He'll tell you after a big game, 'That was fun,' and he means it. It's refreshing to see that, and he kind of exudes it."

So moments like the home run against Miami are culminations that show the results of Bolt's long development. The real culmination, though, hasn't happened yet.

Skye's horizon

Bolt's already been drafted, by the Washington Nationals in the 26th round. It was a good-faith gesture, so that he remembers Washington when he's draft-eligible again in 2015. But he almost went 79th overall to the Cleveland Indians, who made him an offer just shy of seven figures. It wasn't worth it.

"I don't think I was ready," Bolt admitted. "I really don't. Had I not come to school, I'd have been in pro ball out in Florida or Arizona, not necessarily getting the nutrition I need on an individual level. Just thrown into the grind."

Gaining weight the right way will be crucial for Bolt. He's skinny, and adding some weight should elevate his power and help him adjust to pro ball.

"If he stays healthy and puts on the weight he needs to," Hood said, "I don't think it's gonna take long for him to make it to the big leagues."

So Bolt traded a signing bonus for what he hopes will be a long-term payoff. He came to North Carolina, a family environment where he won't get lost in the shuffle. At UNC, Bolt can emulate Moran and ace Kent Emanuel, who have become two of the NCAA's best players after putting on upwards of 20 pounds at Carolina.

"When you look at the strength, weight and physical progression of those two guys since they've been here," Mike Bolt said, "there's no doubt in my mind that'll be Skye in 12 to 18 months."

Yes, those who have watched Bolt play recognize how bright his future is. It's why Dylan Deal, Bolt's high school coach, said, "He's gonna be making a lot of money one day playing this game."

It's why Hood said, "His tools translate not only to professional baseball, but to a very top prospect, and possibly a very, very high draft pick."

And it's why Fox said, "I'm looking forward to coaching him for the next two-and-a-half years," and didn't mean three-and-a-half — he knows Bolt is likely going pro after his junior season.

Of course, the “if he stays healthy” qualifier is always there. So much depends on those four words. The broken foot was a fluke, but nevertheless a reminder of how things can go wrong. That doesn’t stop Bolt from visualizing himself as a major leaguer every day.

“I’m gonna play Major League Baseball on a 25-man roster,” Bolt said. “I fully expect myself to play 162 games for one of the 30 ballclubs.”

Maybe it’s destiny.

In a 2001 Ingles supermarket commercial from back in his modeling days, a six-year-old Skye Bolt looks up open-mouthed at Greg Maddux as the Braves great gives him pitching tips.

“At Ingles,” Maddux says, “one quick stop is all you need to feed a whole roster of future big leaguers.”

He didn’t know the truth of what he’d said.

Tar Heels give loaded ACC best hope at ending championship drought

By Jeff Bradley, Special to SI.com

As the win totals got silly, North Carolina baseball coach Mike Fox tried not to think too much about it. Tried not ask himself stupid questions like, "Are we winning too much?"

Because that's how baseball guys think sometimes, crazy as it sounds. A guy goes 10 for 12 at the plate and he just knows -- doesn't he? -- that he can't possibly stay that hot.

So Fox tried to keep his eyes fixed straight ahead, even as his Tar Heels began the year with 16 straight wins. Tried not to blink when his team rolled through April.

And then, it hit the coach after finishing off a three-game sweep of Duke on April 21.

The Tar Heels were 39-2. They had not budged from the No. 1 spot in the Baseball America poll since the preseason rankings came out. And they were on pace for the best winning percentage in college baseball history, better than Arizona State's .914 in 1972.

"I never thought I wanted us to lose more, because that can't be our mindset," Fox said. "And I wasn't really thinking that the odds were going to catch up with us. But I was thinking, you know, we're probably still going hit a patch at some point. I did not think we would win every ACC series. I still figured there'd be a stretch where we would not be playing at as a high a level, or we'd get a guy injured, or a guy would break up with their girlfriend or whatever. There are just so many different dynamics going on with all these kids that it's never going to be totally smooth from Game 1 through Game 55."

So, Fox, who's in his 15th season at Carolina, swears he was prepared for what happened next. The Tar Heels lost two-of-three to both Georgia Tech and Virginia and finished the regular season with a 47-8 record and the No. 6 rank in the country, though they did win the outright ACC regular season championship for the first time since 1990.

"People will say, 'This is adversity,'" Fox says. "But to me this is not adversity, it's just baseball. We haven't played our best down the stretch, and we played some good teams. So it's going to happen. But I do wonder if it's going to sharpen our blade. I hope it does."

It would be hard to imagine UNC needs any added motivation. Despite reaching the College World Series five times since 2006 and regularly producing major league talent like Mets phenom Matt Harvey, the Tar Heels are still seeking the program's first national championship. They finished as the runner-up to Oregon State in back-to-back years (2006 and '07), and last made it to Omaha in 2011. If those near-misses aren't enough to stoke Carolina's pride, there's another thorn that's been stuck in the side of the Heels and the rest of the ACC since Dwight Eisenhower was in office: No team from the conference has won a College World Series since Wake Forest did so in 1955.

"Yeah, there's that," Fox said. "And it's the time of year for that question. Again."

The ACC may finally have an answer. In addition to UNC, the ACC had three other teams in Baseball America's final regular season top 10: Virginia (No. 5), Florida State (No. 7) and N.C. State (No. 9). Eight ACC schools ranked among the top 22 of the final RPI and five will be regional hosts in the NCAA Tournament field that was announced on Monday, the most of any conference in the country. North Carolina is the field's No. 1 overall seed and at 52-8, carries the nation's best record into the NCAAs.

This past weekend's ACC Tournament showed showcased both the conference's strength and Carolina's mettle. After a mercy-rule win over Miami on Thursday, the Heels defeated Clemson (No. 18) in 14 innings on Friday and N.C. State in 18 innings on Saturday, a game that ended at almost 2 a.m. Less than 12 hours later they were back on the field at Durham Bulls Athletic Park but still triumphed over Virginia Tech (No. 21) to win their first tournament crown since 2007 and re-establish their position as the team that gives the league its best hope for a title since two years before Fox was born.

"They have that look about them," said St. John's coach Ed Blankmeyer, whose Red Storm squad eliminated UNC from the regional the Heels hosted a year ago. "We played them early in the year and they just beat us, 18-5. As I've checked in on them throughout the year, it's obvious they are so much better than they were last year. It's not even close."

The Tar Heels are the only team in the nation to have not lost consecutive games all season. They boast both the ACC Player of the Year in third baseman Colin Moran and the ACC Pitcher of the Year in Kent Emanuel, as well as one of the nation's top freshman, rightfielder Skye Bolt.

"We've got some talent on this team, but we've got some grinders, some tough kids who love to play and hate to lose," said Fox. "I haven't had to say a whole lot to them."

The Heels stand out from college baseball's top teams of recent vintage in that they are not built on speed and small ball, but rather on pure hitting. Fox, who in the past has never been shy about bunting and playing for one run, especially since college baseball mandated less-lively metal bats in 2011, said he adjusted his thinking. The result has been a North Carolina team that leads the nation with 490 runs scored, over 300 more than its opponents.

"We've had a few good offensive teams here, but not like this, especially in the new-bat era," Fox said. "I think everybody goes in wondering how they're going to score runs. You just don't see that many home runs anymore, so this was a little unexpected."

Moran, the nephew of former Tar Heel and major league All-Star B.J. Surhoff (the No. 1 overall pick in the MLB Draft in 1985), is a 6-foot-3, 215-pound lefty hitter with power to all fields. He is expected to go in the top 10 picks in the June draft and be fast-tracked to the big leagues. He's hitting .357 with 13 homers and 84 RBIs, and his 55 bases on balls helped him post a .485 on-base percentage. Senior first baseman Cody Stubbs, the ACC Tournament MVP, hit a team-best .362 with seven homers and 72 RBIs and Bolt batted .349 despite missing a month at midseason with a broken foot.

"We take pride in our offense," said Moran. "The balance throughout the lineup has been great. In the past maybe we've had some holes, maybe were a little top heavy, but this team's very balanced up and down. I always feel like we're going to score runs."

Yet the Tar Heels acknowledge that postseason baseball at any level can look different. When a couple of slip-ups can end a team's season, players can get tight. Fox is already hinting that the team might have to alter its approach slightly in the postseason.

"We haven't been swinging the bats quite as well as we were," Fox said "And we just can't go into these games thinking we're going to out-slug people. I think our style is going to have to change a little, and it has already, down the stretch. We are going to have to manufacture some runs now. I guess we'll see what we're capable of."

Fox is philosophical about Carolina's quest to finally bring home a College World Series title, not just for the university but also for the ACC.

"I look at a guy like Mike Martin at Florida State," Fox said. "If he coaches another five years and ends up going to 20 College World Series and doesn't win one, is that really what people are going to write about him? I certainly would hope not. What is a bigger accomplishment, going to 15 World Series, which he's done, or winning one? It is a complete crapshoot once you get to the College World Series. No one out there cares what league you come from or how you got there. It's eight teams, they're all good and if the ball bounces one way or another. . . . I'd like to see our league win one, so it wouldn't be asked anymore, but who knows? The best team doesn't always win in Omaha."

And the Heels, according to Fox, know better than to even mention Omaha. Too many of them watched St. John's celebrate at Boshamer Stadium in Chapel Hill last spring.

"Last year taught us that you've got to make it out of your regional first," said Emanuel, who is 10-3 record and a 2.11 ERA. "We have the experience to know it's not a given that we're going to make it to Omaha. We know that."

"It's hard to forget walking off that field a loser," said Moran. That was tough."

"That is a light that's on in the room," said Fox. "No one's had to mention it."

If Fox's Tar Heels return to their dominant ways from the start of the season over the next few weeks, no one will ever have to mention it -- or the ACC's title drought -- again.

DURHAM--The architect of this incredible pitching performance needed to explain how this happened. Carolina pitching coach Scott Forbes had just watched his Tar Heel pitchers breeze through what had been a red-hot Virginia Tech offense in the ACC championship game, claiming a 4-1 victory and the tournament title to go with the regular season crown the Heels already held.

Surely, this must have required some amazing tactical adjustments. Forbes sat down on Sunday morning around 2:30 a.m., after his pitching staff had just thrown 32 innings against Clemson and NC State, and had to figure out a way to piece together a title-worthy performance. He'd have to do so without his three weekend starters, his closer/fireman and his fourth starter, all of whom had already thrown significant innings in helping Carolina to a 3-0 record in Durham.

Oh, and he had to come up with some answers in less than 11 hours, because the first pitch was 1 p.m.

Faced with such a thorny predicament, what did Forbes do? This was a rare chance to get inside the mind of a coach making a championship-level decision. Coach, tell us how it happened:

"Well," he said with a grin, "first, I hammered two peanut butter sandwiches. I was starving."

OK. And then what?

"Then I looked at the computer to see what we had. One of the traits of our pitching staff and of our team in general is they want to win. I knew guys were going to come up to me and tell me they were ready to pitch."

He was right. Kent Emanuel, the ACC Pitcher of the Year, was especially persistent.

"Kent didn't ask me every inning if he could pitch," Forbes said. "He asked me every pitch if he could pitch."

The answer was no, every time, which is why pitchers like Emanuel keep enrolling at Carolina. Forbes and head coach Mike Fox wanted to win, but not at the expense of the health of their pitchers or their preparation for the NCAA Tournament. With certain players rendered unavailable by those two factors, the coaching staff thought they had about five legitimate pitching options who were healthy and available. That's five possible arms out of a 27-man postseason roster; five possible arms with the ACC title resting on them.

The first call went to Taylore (the extra "e" is for "enormous") Cherry, a freshman who had thrown a grand total of 3.1 innings this season. The righty tossed five innings of one-run baseball, getting his first career win in the conference championship game. The key moment came in the fifth with Carolina holding a 2-0 lead, as, the Hokies loaded the bases with two outs for Chad Pinder.

One of Virginia Tech's hottest hitters and an all-ACC selection, Pinder ran the count to 3-2.

"We weren't going to let him beat us on an offspeed pitch," Forbes said. "I wanted a fastball away. But Taylore talked to Matt Roberts and they wanted to throw a fastball in. That takes some big-time guts to throw that pitch to that hitter."

On the 3-2 count, with the crowd of over 8,000 roaring, Cherry fired an inside two-seam fastball at 86 miles per hour.

Pinder fouled it down the third-base line.

So the freshman had to do it again. On the next 3-2 pitch, Cherry fired another inside fastball.

Pinder fouled it down the third-base line.

The next 3-2 pitch grabbed just a fraction too much of the plate. Pinder crushed it...foul.

Now the Virginia Tech fans were roaring a chorus of "Let's Go!" and answering with "Hokies!" Cherry and catcher Matt Roberts had a quick conference. Most in the crowd were hoping the Tar Heels would throw anything other than the pitch that had just been smoked off the wall in foul territory. But the Carolina battery knew differently.

"Forbes wanted to go outside," Roberts said. "But I called the inside fastball, because based on his swing that was our best option. He was diving just a little bit because we had thrown him outside all day, and he might have been looking for it. And Taylore got it in there great."

He did. This particular fastball was down more than it was in, but it was down enough that Pinder pounded it into the dirt. Michael Russell gobbled it up at shortstop and threw to first to retire the side, ending Virginia Tech's best threat of the afternoon.

On a day when the Tar Heels thought they might need a bevy of arms--before the game, position players were joking about their availability on the mound, but the jokes had a touch of seriousness to them, because really, after the last two days, you couldn't rule out the possibility that, say, Brian Holberton might need to throw an inning--they needed just two. Trevor Kelley breezed through the final four innings to get his second career save.

It's not amazing, really, that the Tar Heel pitching staff gave up just eight earned runs in 49 innings in the ACC Tournament. What's amazing is that it wasn't just outstanding performances from one or two hot pitchers. It was everyone. Eleven different Tar Heels took the mound in Durham; that's every single pitcher on the postseason roster.

Do you realize how incredibly rare it is to use the entire pitching staff in an event like this? Now, do you realize how incredibly unheard of it is to throw every single arm--and have them all be productive?

"We have so much competition within the staff," said senior Chris Munnelly, who threw three scoreless innings against NC State. "We go so deep in the bullpen. Everybody is a good pitcher. When we go out there, the hard work pays off. The mentality is that whoever goes out there is going to throw the ball exactly where they want to."

Tomorrow, Carolina learns its postseason destination. Regional sites are announced tonight, and the Tar Heels are a virtual certainty to play in Chapel Hill. The bracket is unveiled tomorrow at noon, when Carolina will enter the NCAA Tournament as the regular season and tournament champions of one of the best baseball conferences in the country.

Asked separately about that pair of achievements, Roberts and Munnelly both said the exact same phrase:

"It's a testament to our hard work."

Maybe they can even celebrate with a peanut butter sandwich.

Turner's Take: The Payoff Pitch - University of North Carolina Tar Heels Official Athletic Site

There's a reason they call it the payoff pitch. The count is full at three balls and two strikes. Another ball and the batter has earned a walk. Another strike and he's walking back to the dugout. A batted ball forces the defense to make a play. On a 3-2 count, whether it's the hitter's patience or the pitcher's persistence, something is about to pay off.

Such was the case late Saturday night in Durham (ten minutes to midnight, to be exact), in Carolina's thrilling 18-inning victory over N.C. State. Beginning in the bottom of the ninth inning, the top-seeded Tar Heels, the visiting team as a result of a coin toss, had no margin for error in a tie game. If they wanted to win, they would have to score. And if they didn't score, they'd have to keep the Wolfpack off the scoreboard in the bottom halves of all those innings.

In the top of the 13th, Carolina had gotten runners to the corners with two outs. With ACC Player of the Year Colin Moran coming to the plate, N.C. State went to their fourth pitcher of the game, junior left-hander D.J. Thomas. A month earlier in Raleigh, Moran had gone 0-3 against Thomas. On this night, he swung at the first pitch he saw and popped out to left field.

In the bottom half, Tar Heel sophomore Chris McCue relieved freshman Trent Thornton on the mound. Thornton had thrown a brilliant 6 2/3 innings, not allowing a hit, walking just two and striking out seven on 91 pitches. McCue and Thornton, once high school teammates at Charlotte's Ardrey Kell, are now two of Carolina's most reliable bullpen arms.

A year ago, McCue had been a freshman flamethrower tossing heat in the low to mid-90s. He was effective, mixing that fastball with a sharp curveball, but he wasn't really a strikeout pitcher. His changeup, a pitch intended to look like a fastball but fool hitters into swinging early, wasn't slow enough.

When former Tar Heel Bryant Gaines came back to Chapel Hill as an assistant coach last fall, he took stock of the Carolina pitchers and their strengths. Gaines identified McCue's changeup as something that, if improved upon, could make him a complete pitcher. "We want to look like a fast ball coming out of your hand," Gaines said. "We want fastball arm speed, we want fastball finish, and that's where it gives it the deception to get hitters to swing and miss. He's got such quick arm action, and he throws low 90s," said Gaines. "When you bring in an 80 mile an hour changeup, not only does the change of speed fool you, but when you add depth and cut and sink, it makes that pitch that much harder, because the looks are so similar."

So they changed McCue's grip, offsetting the ball and moving it further away from the strongest part of his hand, to the point that it was almost uncomfortable to hold. "He just took to it like a duck to water," Gaines said. "It began to sink, and it was significantly slower than his fastball, and it kind of snowballed from there. Never did I think that it would become such a deadly pitch to hitters, but it ended up being something that really helped him out this year."

Late Saturday night, in the bottom of the 13th inning of a 1-1 game, McCue took that changeup to the mound against N.C. State. The first batter he faced, Wolfpack shortstop Trea Turner, singled on a 1-1 pitch. "I left it over the plate, and he just got a good barrel on it," McCue said. Turner is nimble on the basepaths, having led the nation in stolen bases in 2012, and he represented the game-winning run. Perhaps distracted, McCue issued a five-pitch walk to Jake Fincher. "I think I was more concerned about Turner stealing," he said. "I kind of shortened up a lot with it, and I wasn't really getting my pitches where I wanted to over the plate."

Brett Austin then laid down a sacrifice bunt to get the winning run to third. McCue said he didn't try to pitch around the bunt. "They're giving us a free out; we might as well take it. I just try to throw whatever's called," he said.

1-1. Bottom of the 13th. Runners on second and third. One out. A base hit wins the game. A fly ball deep enough to the outfield wins the game. The Tar Heel coaching staff elects to intentionally walk Tarran Senay. "You have to have a forceout at the plate," associate head coach Scott Forbes said while reviewing film of the game. "It can't be a tag play, so we intentionally walk him."

Wolfpack third baseman Grant Clyde was the next man up. He was 1-5 on the night, but that one hit was a double off of Hobbs Johnson that had driven in N.C. State's only run of the game. Carolina quickly made a change in right field, subbing Zach Daly for Parks Jordan in case a deep fly ball provided the opportunity for Turner to tag and attempt to score. Against Clyde, Forbes elected to go with McCue's best pitch. He signaled catcher Brian Holberton to call for the changeup.

Clyde swung at a pitch out of the zone for strike one. "I probably wasn't thinking about a strikeout right out of the gate until he looked so bad on his first changeup," Forbes said. "We threw him the rest, and we punched him out." The second one crossed the outer edge of the plate. Called strike two. Out of the hand, the third pitched looked low in the zone. Clyde offered. The ball dove into the dirt, where Holberton held on. Strike three.

Two outs. Bases loaded. Game-winning run at third base. Brett Williams approached the plate. Williams had struck out twice in three at-bats against Thornton, in the sixth on a fastball and on a slider in the 11th. Given Williams' tendencies to swing hard, Forbes knew he had his best man on the mound. They stuck with the changeup.

McCue's first offering started outside the zone and stayed there. Holberton stopped it again. Ball one. Williams was out in front of the next pitch. 1-1. The next changeup low again. 2-1. Williams chased again and missed to make it 2-2. Williams fouled off the next pitch into the N.C. State dugout. "You knew right then that he didn't see it good," Forbes said. "He fouled that ball off, but he was running like he hit the ball fair." 2-2. Another changeup down, another foul ball.

Williams came around on the next 2-2, a pitch that rode in on the right-handed batter. He hit it sharply foul down the third-base line. An offering low and in ran the count full.

Two outs. Bases loaded. Game-winning run at third base. 3-2. The payoff pitch.

"The thing about a changeup is, a right-handed pitcher against a right-handed batter, you see fastball," Forbes said. "If it was a slider, you see slider. Curveball, you see curveball. Me and Holbie were constantly communicating. He didn't look good on any of them. He swung and missed some ones for strikes, he took the other ones, so we stayed with it, even on 3-2."

"I knew if I could throw another good changeup somewhere down, he'd probably chase it," McCue said.

"His biggest focus when he's throwing that pitch to Williams is to have more extension, so he's really trying to work to finish that pitch toward the outer third of the plate," Gaines said, "because if he throws it and just finishes it middle, it's going to run right back into his bat."

Out of the hand, the pitch looked 'fat,' as Gaines calls it, like it was there for the swinging. Williams took a cut . . . and whiffed. The ball spun out of the zone and into Holberton's mitt. Williams had swung all the way through it. Strike three, inning over.

"It is about making pitches, but at the same time, it's looking at what they're going to chase, too," McCue said. "Those are hard pitches that you don't want to take in that situation. I knew that batter was going to be aggressive so I thought there was a good chance if I could throw a good changeup and stay through it that he'd swing at it."

"I think Brett Williams was telling himself to take it," Gaines said. "He knew it was coming. I don't have any doubt in my mind that he knew it was coming but when it comes in it looks so fat that you have to swing at it and that's what makes Chris' pitch so good. It looks fat and then it falls out of the zone and you swing at it, and then you see where the ball ends up being."

"He swung at ball four," Forbes said of Williams. Then again, it's not ball four until the last ten feet or so. "He threw it where you're supposed to throw it with two strikes, but I mean that's why he swung at it and missed it. He sees fastball."

McCue had thrown three changeups to Clyde for the strikeout, and eight more to Williams to get out of the jam and continue the inning. Forbes and Holberton wanted McCue to stick to his best pitch, and he delivered. "You can't fear the walk," Forbes said. "We talk about it every time. If you say 'I can't walk him,' you lay one down the middle."

"I didn't want to leave it too much over the plate, just because I knew that if he's sitting on it, which most likely he was, he would get a good piece of it," McCue said. "I tried to really throw it on the outer half of the plate. Maybe I wanted it a little bit closer, but at the same time, they were chasing it all night."

It would take another five innings - another two hours - before Cody Stubbs would single in Landon Lassiter for the go-ahead run, and Chris Munnely would then slam the door shut on the Wolfpack. But McCue's changeup in the 13th ended the Wolfpack threat was a game-winner nonetheless. The payoff pitch paid off.

"Let's say Brett Williams takes that pitch and we walk him," Gaines said. "At least we can say they beat us on our best pitch, he had a good at-bat and we just tip our hat to him. But it didn't happen. And that's a testament to Chris McCue."

Moran Adds To Family Legacy At UNC

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Out of hundreds of games, Colin Moran guesses he might've won once. Maybe twice. But definitely not often.

Brian Moran remembers it differently. He doesn't think Colin ever won at all. And if he did, it was because rain or some other silly excuse cut the game short.

The fact is, Colin never had much of a chance in those one-on-one wiffle ball games. How could he? Brian was a wicked pitcher with a lefty-on-lefty advantage who could make the ball zip, dance and dart past his flailing brother with ease.

He was also four years older, but Colin never let such disparities discourage him. He played for the same reasons his older brother did: They had grown up watching their uncle B.J. Surhoff play for the Milwaukee Brewers and Baltimore Orioles. They had been in big-league clubhouses together, collected baseball cards together and shared a collective dream of someday becoming stars themselves.

And so Colin would always play with Brian, whether it was wiffle ball in their backyard in Rye, N.Y., or at baseball academies with children who were much older than Colin was. He wasn't easily intimidated. He had no doubt that he could compete with them—even if the results said otherwise.

"If Colin was playing with Brian's friends, he was expected to perform as well as the older kids," said Diane Moran, Colin and Brian's mother. "He was never taught that he was a little kid and he couldn't do anything.

"To play with the big boys, you have to play like the big boys."

Now a junior third baseman at North Carolina and a surefire first-round MLB draft pick, Colin Moran can finally call himself a big boy, too. There are no older kids. There's no one bigger or stronger. And his big brother is off playing in the minor leagues.

But the lofty expectations he once faced in his backyard are still with him. They haven't gone anywhere.

They drive him. They fuel him. And then, other times, they beat him.

Start Me Up

Mick Jagger was, and still is, an electrifying frontman. In his prime, he had the moves, the look and the swagger necessary to grab an audience and never let go.

He still has the same effect when his voice blares out over the Boshamer Stadium PA system, after the classic opening chords and pulsing drumbeat of The Rolling Stones' "Start Me Up" fill the air.

That sound is Colin Moran's cue to begin his slow trip to the plate. Without it, you might not even notice he's there.

He's a star player without the star persona—a lead singer who'd rather let his guitarist grab all of the magazine covers.

"He's a little quiet," sophomore shortstop Michael Russell said. "Before you get to know Colin, he's just not super open. He can come off as a little shy."

Even Moran's approach at the plate can come across as passive. The third baseman is well known for his plate discipline as he waits and waits and waits for the right pitch in the right spot. Pitchers who know what Moran can do to a baseball won't give him anything to hit, and as a result, many of his at-bats end with a nonchalant walk to first base. Just this season alone, he's earned 55 walks to only 20 strikeouts.

But, when he does get a pitch to hit, he's impossible to ignore. He burst onto the scene as a freshman, winning Baseball America Freshman of the Year and first-team All-America honors as he led the Tar Heels with a .335 average, a .982 OPS, nine home runs and 71 RBIs on their way to the College World Series. Moran hit .357 this season, and he's generally regarded by scouts as one of the best pure hitters in the collegiate game.

"You kind of get lulled to sleep with Colin," UNC coach Mike Fox said. "He just doesn't do anything to wow you until someone hits him the ball or until he gets in the box. He's not any of the players that you're just going to notice. But he's a pretty special player."

Moran admits he isn't a very complicated guy. He's content with watching TV in his free time and spends more time observing his roommates play video games than playing them himself. He's soft-spoken, but he also has a sharp—and at times self-deprecating—sense of humor. Just ask him about the mustache he tried to grow in March. "It's not for me," Moran jokes. "It got pretty ugly."

Of course, there's a whole other side to Moran, too, one you can't always see. It's an invisible inner struggle that's been brewing since his backyard days.

"He looks like he's calm," Diane Moran said, "but he's his own biggest competition. He gets very upset with himself if he makes an error. He expects a hit every time and a perfect throw every time.

"Sometimes he's his own worst critic."

You Got Me Ticking

Bill and Diane Moran had no reason to suspect anything was wrong. They just sat and enjoyed the view from the stands of their baseball living room.

For at least nine months out of the year, Rye, N.Y., is the couple's home. But as soon as baseball season returns to Chapel Hill, so do the Morans. They have a temporary apartment arranged for just the occasion, and when the games begin, Boshamer Stadium is theirs for the taking.

They have every right to claim it. Though the place was built in 2009, it already oozes with family history. Banners and plaques of Diane's brother, B.J. Surhoff, are prominently displayed like badges of honor throughout the stadium. He's one of the most prolific players in UNC history, a national player of the year in 1985 and a 19-year MLB veteran. But he isn't their only connection to the place.

The Morans' oldest son, Brian, was one of the players who helped break in the stadium in its inaugural season. He was an All-America reliever, and now he's across the country playing Triple-A baseball in the Seattle Mariners organization. The Morans still watch all of his games over the Internet, even with the three-hour time difference. “We’ll just have to become night owls,” Diane jokes.

On this day, though, the Morans are in the park to see their youngest Tar Heel, Colin.

It was March 24, 2012, a gorgeous spring afternoon—and a day the Morans won’t be forgetting anytime soon. From their left field seats, they can’t see the warning signs. They don’t see the frustration that mounts after Colin throws a ball away and sparks an N.C. State rally. They don’t see the mental anguish building as he grounds out to end the next half inning.

They don’t even notice that Colin doesn’t come out in the on-deck circle—as he should’ve—in the ninth inning, just before the Tar Heels fell to the Wolfpack.

All Diane remembers is the phone call from the trainer in the parking lot after the game. She remembers the ride to the hospital. The X-rays. The bad news from the doctor.

Diane and Bill saw the aftermath, but they never saw the eruption.

In a way, Colin missed it, too.

It had happened so fast: One second he was manning third base, and the next he was in the locker room, right fist smashed against the bathroom door in a flash of self-directed fury. He had never been hurt this badly before. He didn’t know how to react. He saw his hand and immediately and frantically tried to repair the damage, to pop it back into place. He saw the team trainer out of the corner of his eye, just staring at him and shaking his head.

“At the moment, I wasn’t even thinking at all to be honest,” Moran said. “And right after, I was like, ‘God, I’m an idiot.’ ”

All the while, his parents were sitting in the Boshamer Stadium stands, oblivious. They were unaware that their son’s emotions had gotten the best of him—that he was about to learn such a painful lesson.

You Make A Grown Man Cry

B.J. Surhoff doesn’t like to meddle in his nephews’ affairs unless it’s absolutely necessary. He’d rather let them form their own identities on and off the baseball field—just like he does with his own four children.

But when he heard that Moran had broken his hand, that it was self-inflicted and that he could miss a month because of it, he knew it was one of those times where some guidance was needed.

His message was short and simple:

Never do anything with your hands, because those are how you make your money.

“I would say I chastised him in a light-hearted way,” Surhoff said. “He’s lucky he didn’t do some real damage to himself, and, I mean, it cost him. He learned a valuable lesson pretty cheaply, fortunately.”

It’s a lesson that Surhoff had learned himself—though not in such an extreme fashion.

Surhoff was conditioned through years of playing a sport that expects you to fail seven times out of 10 and pats you on the back for the three successes. A career .282 hitter, he was humbled by sharing the field with players who were just as good, if not better than he was. He said his managers’ expectations were never higher than his own, but eventually, he learned to temper them. Eventually, he learned to accept his failures.

And that’s something that Moran will learn, too, Surhoff said, but it’s important that he enjoy his time in college while he still has the luxury.

“When you get into pro ball, it’s a whole different animal,” Surhoff said. “It’s your job. It’s 24/7. In college, you’re allowed to be a kid a little bit more. You have school to deal with, you have social issues, your friends are there, you have the whole capacity of life you’re dealing with.

“He’ll never get his college years back. This is it. Pro ball’s gonna be there. It’s not going anywhere.”

You Got To Never, Never, Never Stop

“Moran who?”

In the games right after Colin broke his hand, that was coach Fox’s tongue-in-cheek rallying cry. He needed his players to get in the mindset that they could win without their best player—no matter how difficult it seemed.

In truth, it was a tough season for the Tar Heels with or without Moran. They struggled to find offensive consistency, and they ultimately missed the College World Series for just the second time in seven years.

For 21 games that season, all Moran could do was provide moral support. He sat on the bench, watching 13 wins he could’ve contributed to and eight losses he could’ve helped reverse. It was an unusual position for him, made worse by the fact that he had done it to himself.

“It gives you a different perspective,” Moran said. “It definitely makes you not take for granted being up here on the field ... Because sitting is not very fun at all, just knowing that you can’t help your team.”

By all accounts, the lessons he learned in those 21 games have sunk in.

Russell said he and his teammates could see how much Moran was itching to get back. They could see how hard he had worked, and they immediately knew how much they had missed him after he homered in his first day back in the lineup.

Months after the season ended, B.J. Surhoff had dinner with Moran in Chapel Hill. He saw how much Moran had grown up from the experience, from being away from home, from having to figure out things on his own. He told him to try to enjoy his junior season, to enjoy his teammates and to not get caught up in all of the draft buzz that was bound to surround him.

Coming into this season, Moran’s parents saw a newfound maturity, a change in perspective from their son. Now, when he talks about punching the door, he laughs. He cracks a joke. He makes fun of himself.

“He learned that it’s OK,” Diane said, “that you can’t take everything quite so hard.”

He’s also a different person on the field—better in every way, with his glove and with his bat.

With 13 home runs this season, he’s exceeded his total from his first two years combined (12). He’s posted career-highs for on-base percentage (.485) and slugging percentage (.579), and in Fox’s eyes, he’s gone from being a good defender to being the first person on the field he wants the ball hit to.

“He’s always had that power, but now he’s gotten bigger and stronger, and he lifts all the time,” Fox said. “I think the development has really just come with him meeting expectations. He’s had to be mentally tough with everyone wanting to talk to him, and the draft’s coming up, so it’s easy to get distracted.”

But there’s no doubt that Moran is focused. He’s doing all of this for a team that goes into the NCAA tournament as the No. 1 national seed. He has his eyes on winning UNC’s first ever College World Series—not on the scouts sitting in the Boshamer Stadium stands.

“If it works out, and I get drafted, you know, I have a dream of playing professional baseball,” Moran said. “If everything falls into place, then I can start that up.”

But until then, he won't stop.

He won't stop until he has his own banners and plaques hanging around Boshamer Stadium.

DeCock: Heels rally, rally and rally again in instant classic

By Luke DeCock - staff columnist

PUBLISHED IN: LUKE DECOCK

CHAPEL HILL There were officially 3,517 people in Boshamer Stadium on Monday night, almost all of whom were still there Tuesday morning.

In a decade, 10 times that many will claim to have been there. In a generation, countless thousands will tell their kids they were there the night North Carolina played the baseball game that wouldn't end, with the Tar Heels' season hanging in the balance.

Twice, Florida Atlantic hit what looked, and felt like, game-winning home runs. Twice, North Carolina rallied back. On a night when some strange pitching choices put the Tar Heels in danger, their bats kept saving their season – at one point, by not swinging at all – until the top-seeded Tar Heels averted disaster and moved on to host South Carolina in this weekend's Super Regional.

Cody Stubbs singled in the winning run in the bottom of the 13th as the Tar Heels won 12-11 and saved North Carolina coach Mike Fox from a lifetime of second-guessing over his decision to turn to tired starters Kent Emanuel and Benton Moss in relief. Those two combined to give up six runs in the top of the ninth inning before the Tar Heels scored two of their own in the bottom half to prolong their season.

They did it again in the 12th, after a three-run homer put the Owls back in the lead, loading the bases with no outs before Stubbs and Michael Russell both drew walks to bring the Tar Heels within a run. Mike Zolk tied it up with an RBI single but Fox sent Stubbs home and he was out at the plate.

It started with a two-hour rain delay and ended well into Tuesday morning, full of twists and turns and pathos and drama, without a doubt the most heart-wrenching college baseball game – forget that, sporting event – played in the state of North Carolina in a long time.

The No. 1 national seed survived, the Tar Heels avoided losing two straight regionals on their home field, South Carolina will visit as planned for this weekend's Super Regional – and by the time it was over, no one was more relieved than Fox, whose use of Emanuel and Moss seemed odd at the time and catastrophic in retrospect.

Fox used freshman closer Trent Thornton for four scoreless innings Monday – he hasn't allowed a run in his past 16 1/3 – after starter Chris Munnely only lasted three, but the Tar Heels were leading 6-2 at that point.

After last year's debacle, when the Tar Heels lost to St. John's on Saturday and Sunday on their home field, Fox would take no chances this time around, even if it meant risking the invaluable left arm of Emanuel, the ACC's pitcher of the year, on short rest. Emanuel had thrown 124 pitches only 48 hours earlier.

The crowd murmured nervously as Emanuel came in for Thornton with two on and nobody out in the eighth. He got the three outs to hold the lead, to applause. But there was vocal concern when Emanuel came out to open the ninth.

Fox stuck with him through a solo homer to Corey Keller but the bases were quickly loaded. When he walked in a run, struggling to throw 85 mph on his 51st pitch, well below his usual velocity, that was finally it. Moss, who pitched Friday, came in to face Tyler Rocklein, who launched a 1-1 pitch far into the parking lot to the left of the left field scoreboard.

But the Tar Heels would come back then, and again in the 12th, and then win it in the 13th on Stubbs' single. Anyone would say it will never forget it. And even some who didn't.

DeCock: UNC freshman pitcher takes on key role

By Luke DeCock

PUBLISHED IN: COLLEGE BASEBALL

CHAPEL HILL Of all the arms on North Carolina's vaunted pitching staff, the most valuable may belong to a freshman whose role was very much undecided when the season started.

The Tar Heels' starters have carried them all season, but in the postseason, no one has done more to move the Tar Heels along than freshman closer Trent Thornton, whose lengthy relief outings have stretched the definition of that role.

With North Carolina pressed to the brink of elimination by Florida Atlantic and fourth starter Chris Munnely only good for three innings on Monday after a two-hour rain delay just before game time, Thornton came in early and pitched late.

His four-inning, four-hit stint of scoreless relief kept the Tar Heels in a game that would turn improbably wild after he left, ending with a walk-off single in the bottom of the 13th and a 12-11 North Carolina win. It was yet another solid outing in a postseason where Thornton has continued to improve with every appearance.

A year after the Tar Heels' season ended when record-setting closer Michael Morin struggled in the NCAA tournament, Thornton hasn't allowed a run in the postseason heading into this weekend's NCAA super regional against South Carolina in Chapel Hill.

"I've seen him do it before, and that's a special kid we have here," North Carolina coach Mike Fox said Friday, after another perfect relief appearance from Thornton. "He's made the dean's list, just as a side note, besides the fact that he's closing games in a regional for us as a freshman. He's got that 'it' factor."

Coming out of Ardrey Kell High School in Charlotte, Thornton started the season as a mid-week starter – a perfect 5-0 in five starts – before he was moved into the bullpen. The longer he was there, the better he fared. Five of his first seven appearances were starts. He picked up his first save on April 6 and added five more in the final six weeks of the regular season. On the season, he's 9-1 with a 1.17 ERA and eight saves.

After contributing 6 2/3 innings of no-hit relief in the 18-inning win over N.C. State at the ACC tournament, Thornton picked up where he left off this weekend. He had a win and two saves in 7 1/3 scoreless innings, allowing seven hits while striking out 11. He hasn't allowed a run in his last five appearances, spanning 16 1/3 innings.

“There’s definitely some more pressure now that we’re in the regionals,” Thornton said. “Just have to bear down and focus a little bit more. But it’s fun to have pressure.”

It must be, because it looks like he’s enjoying it. He even struck out Florida Atlantic’s Corey Keller twice after Keller hit a home run to deep left-center in the second inning off Munnely and before he hit another even deeper in the ninth off Kent Emanuel.

By the time Thornton gave up back-to-back singles to open the eighth and left to a standing ovation, the Tar Heels had a four-run lead. Thornton had done everything in his power to make it stand up. It didn’t, of course, but that’s another story entirely.

What makes Thornton unique for the Tar Heels is his age. The top-10 single-season save leaders at North Carolina are all sophomores, juniors or seniors. The last (and only) freshman to save eight games at North Carolina was Paul Shuey in 1990.

“I’m not sure the last time we had a freshman closer,” Fox said. “I can’t remember back that far. But I think our team trusts him now, which is important.”

DeCock: After this season, North Carolina deserves to relish in this win

PUBLISHED IN: COLLEGE BASEBALL

CHAPEL HILL There's no chance Omaha is prepared for this. Put these two teams on that stage, and there's no telling what might happen Sunday. It took 18 innings to decide a winner in the ACC tournament, and both North Carolina and N.C. State have even more momentum now than they did then.

Two days after the Wolfpack booked its spot in the College World Series, the Tar Heels joined them Tuesday, falling behind again, coming back to win again, using ace Kent Emanuel in relief again, going to the College World Series again, for the sixth time in eight years.

After five days of rain, bad defense, more rain, worse defense, a collective meltdown by the North Carolina starting rotation, two strong relief outings from Trent Thornton and some clutch hitting, the Tar Heels finally emerged with a 5-4 win against South Carolina.

There's nothing novel about the Tar Heels going to the College World Series, but after missing out last year, after everything they have been through to get this far this year, they might just appreciate it a bit more. Even coach Mike Fox jumped on the dogpile, for the first and, he said, likely last time.

"This one's a lot different," Emanuel said. "Freshman year, when we won the second game of the (super regional), all the freshmen were talking about how that was a little too easy. It seemed like it happened real quick. That was definitely not the case this year."

If there's anything North Carolina and N.C. State have in common, it's a flair for the dramatic. The Wolfpack clinched its spot with a walk-off win Saturday and a 17-inning win Sunday; not to be outdone, the Tar Heels had a walk-off win of their own Saturday and dug out of a hole of their own making Tuesday.

After Chaz Frank dropped a routine fly ball to center in the fifth to put South Carolina in the lead, the Tar Heels benefited from two misplays, an error and a walk with the bases loaded in the sixth, to take the lead for good.

It was yet another opportunistic offensive outburst from the Tar Heels, who haven't really been the dominant hitting team they were in the regular season so far in the postseason, but have excelled at finding ways to score despite that. If their bats get cranked up in Omaha, look out.

Emanuel got two outs on two pitches to seal the victory three days after his last start – he only went 2 1/3 innings Saturday, part of a weekend where the three Carolina starters combined for 6 1/3 innings – and eight days after his controversial relief appearance in the 13-inning win against Florida Atlantic.

No controversy this time, just the first save of his career. Very little has come easy for the Tar Heels this postseason. That did.

So after the regional upset by St. John's here last year, after scratching and clawing their way through the postseason this year, the Tar Heels are resuming their near-annual procession to Omaha, where they'll face a local rival making its first appearance in 45 years.

"That's how hard it is. It's hard to get to Omaha," Fox said. "We're going six times in eight years, and I told my players last night, that's mind-blowing to me. ... We'll have our hands full, obviously. Right now, we just want to relish going."

If last year taught them not to take it for granted, this year asked them for everything they had. They earned the right to savor it.

UNC rallies to beat South Carolina 5-4 to advance to College World Series

MLB First-Year Players Draft, 7 p.m., MLB Network

UNC's Moran set to join uncle and brother as first round draft pick

Published: June 5, 2013

UNC third baseman Colin Moran (18) connects for a base hit during the Tar Heels' game against Florida Atlantic on Monday June 3, 2013 at Boshamer Stadium in Chapel Hill, N.C.

ROBERT WILLETT — rwillett@newsobserver.com

By Andrew Carter — acarter@newsobserver.com

CHAPEL HILL — Colin Moran remembers his first trip to Yankee Stadium.

It was during the late 1990s. He remembers the traffic, where he sat. The first time he went was with his brother and grandmother and one of her friends. They were all there to see the Yankees play the Orioles. B.J. Surhoff, Moran's uncle, played for them at the time.

"It was definitely a huge source of pride," Moran, North Carolina's junior third baseman, said earlier this week. "When you're going to school, and kind of known as B.J. Surhoff's nephew – it was kind of awesome, to be honest with you. Just knowing that you've got a family member who's so successful, and a guy you can look to."

Before he began a 19-year career in the Major Leagues, Surhoff was an All-American for the Tar Heels. He was picked first overall in the 1985 Major League Baseball draft. If you walk around UNC's Boshamer Stadium, there are slight reminders of Surhoff's legacy: plaques, pictures.

In his own way, Moran is a reminder of that legacy too. He bears a physical resemblance to his uncle.

And when the MLB draft begins Thursday night, Moran will have something else in common with Surhoff. Moran will be a first-round pick. And like Surhoff was, Moran is expected to be the first player chosen from the state.

Surhoff was the second UNC player – behind Dave Lemonds in 1968 – to be selected No. 1 overall in the draft. Moran isn't projected to go that high, but Baseball America considers him the seventh-best draft-eligible prospect.

It would be easy to assume Moran simply followed his bloodlines to arrive at this point. Surhoff was the first member of his family to play at UNC, and then Moran's brother, Brian, came along and was picked in the seventh round of the draft in 2009. Yet Moran's genes are but one factor in his evolution into one of the top prospects in the country.

"He's definitely had to work through some stuff," said Brian Moran, a pitcher with Tacoma Rainiers, the Class AAA affiliate of the Seattle Mariners. "He wasn't highly-recruited out of high school. I don't think too much has been handed to him because of anything."

Neither Brian nor Colin Moran were drafted out of high school. Colin Moran wasn't even heavily recruited. He was the final player that UNC signed as part of its 2010 recruiting class, and his spot only came open because of attrition.

"Even with a big-league uncle, even with a brother that was having college success, even with the bloodlines, he didn't attract a lot of scouting attention out of high school," John Manuel, the editor of Baseball America, said of Moran. "So I think there's the perception that he just has good genes, he's got these big-league bloodlines. ... And that's part of it.

"But that kind of sells his work ethic and the work that he's put in a little short."

Both Moran brothers were standout high school players at Iona Prep School in New Rochelle, N.Y. Yet professional scouts rarely saw them play.

They were young for their graduating classes, and less physically developed than other prospects. And New York isn't known as a fertile ground for high school baseball players.

"I talked to some teams, maybe like one or two," Colin Moran said. "But I guess coming from New York – the place where I'm from is not exactly a hotbed for prospects. So I don't know – I didn't really have much interest out of high school."

UNC knew about Moran because of the connection to his brother, and to Surhoff. But a lot of programs didn't bother to recruit him.

Moran generated serious interest only after he played in a showcase event in Jupiter, Fla. After that, Florida Atlantic, the team that UNC recently defeated in 13 innings to advance to a Super Regional, offered Moran a scholarship. He considered playing there, and also considered Elon and Virginia Tech.

Yet Moran always knew that if he had a chance to play at UNC, he would go. Both Moran brothers were fans of the Tar Heels growing up, regardless of the sport. It also helped that their uncle had no shortage of success there.

By the time Colin Moran arrived at UNC in 2010, his brother was already gone. Brian Moran at times worried. He knew his younger brother had lofty dreams, but also knew he could face a difficult road to reaching them at UNC, which, under coach Mike Fox, hasn't had difficulty attracting high school talent.

"I was excited for him when he decided that he wanted to go to UNC," Brian Moran said. "But I was a little nervous too. But he went to school and fit right in."

Colin Moran was better than people thought, sooner than they thought he would be. After a successful first fall and winter, he started at third base as a freshman and led UNC with a .335 batting average and 71 RBIs.

Manuel said Moran is a prized commodity to scouts for numerous reasons: His ability to hit to all portions of the field, his potential to hit for power and his improvement as a defensive player.

"I do like his chances of going in the first 10 picks, and I think the fact that he has a long track record of hitting at a high level ... that will get him consistently high on all teams' draft boards," Manuel said. "And then he has improved that defense to the point that he's seen as a third baseman."

"Not as a third baseman you have to move to first."

Moran, whose 86 RBIs are a single-season school record, has struggled of late.

Overall Moran's production has slipped during the past few weeks, but Manuel doesn't anticipate that affecting his draft position.

"We definitely thought, should we drop him?" Manuel said. "Is he too high on our board? I think more to it is just hitting .400 like he was coming into May – that's just unsustainable. Nobody does that in college baseball at a high level of competition anymore, not with these bats."

Moran is close with his uncle, who has provided guidance when Moran has sought it, but he's much closer with his older brother. Brian Moran now plays on the same minor league team as Dustin Ackley, the former Tar Heels' All-American who was picked second overall in the draft in 2009. Moran is expected to become the fourth UNC player since 2009 to be selected in the first round.

It was only four years ago when Brian Moran was in his younger brother's shoes, waiting to be drafted. The elder Moran has offered his insight into what to expect during the draft process, and what life in the minor leagues might be like.

"Whether he sees it through his uncle or me, I think he has a pretty good idea of what to expect," Brian Moran said.

A few years ago Colin Moran might not have expected this. As an undrafted player out of high school, and the final member of a recruiting class that featured players who arrived in college with greater reputations, Moran dreamed about becoming one of best players in the nation.

It might have seemed like a long shot then but here he is – on the cusp of becoming the second member of his family to become a first-round selection in the Major League draft.

"It's hard to describe," he said. "It's crazy to think three years ago I had a dream to get drafted. And I didn't really set a round or anything like that. But I was hoping hard work would pay off and now I have a chance to continue my dream of going to the big leagues."

Strelow: Tar Heels have Fox's back, clinch berth to CWS

By Bret Strelow

Staff writer

CHAPEL HILL - As soon as Mike Zolk caught shortstop Michael Russell's sidearmed throw to second base for the final out in a 5-4 victory, North Carolina players and coaches charged toward the Boshamer Stadium mound.

Just as Mike Fox had anticipated.

Monday night, about 15 hours before the Tar Heels faced South Carolina with a College World Series berth at stake, Fox sent his team an email divulging the time for Tuesday's pregame meal. He also provided a script for how the dogpile would unfold once North Carolina won.

Taylor Cherry and Mason McCullough, pitchers who weigh a combined 500 pounds, needed to be at the bottom, Fox wrote lightheartedly. Noting how much fun first-base coach Scott Jackson appeared to have after a regional-clinching victory against Florida Atlantic, Fox revealed that he planned to join this celebration.

Fox instilled the Tar Heels with confidence, and they rewarded their coach with a win that pushed the program to its sixth CWS appearance in eight years. Given the way last season ended, and the obstacles UNC has faced this postseason, who could blame the 56-year-old Fox for participating in the pileup?

"That's the first one I've jumped in in 15 years here," Fox said. "It might be my last one, but it was fun."

Fox wanted his players to have fun Tuesday. Dealing with the pressure of being the No. 1 overall seed, attempting to bounce back from a premature tournament exit in 2012 and trying to join rival N.C. State in Omaha, Neb., that was easier said - or emailed - than done, especially when senior center fielder Chaz Frank dropped a two-out flyball to let South Carolina take a fifth-inning lead.

When the frame ended, Frank jogged into the dugout and slapped the glove off his right hand. He walked from one end to the other in pursuit of a drink, receiving countless words of encouragement and pats on the behind from teammates.

A one-run deficit with five at-bats remaining was no reason to panic for this battle-tested group.

The Tar Heels were behind 7-2 in the ninth inning of an ACC tournament game against Clemson on May 24, and they won 12-7 in 14 innings. A day later, they erased a 1-0 deficit against N.C. State ace Carlos Rodon with an eighth-inning run and prevailed 2-1 in 18 innings.

Facing elimination last Monday against FAU, trailing 8-6 following a ninth-inning grand slam and 11-8 after a three-run homer in the 12th, North Carolina somehow pulled out a 12-11 win in 13 innings.

It was no shock, then, when South Carolina took the lead Tuesday in a rescheduled game that began at noon.

"Starting the game at 12, we play better at midnight," joked third baseman Colin Moran, the No. 6 overall pick in last week's draft.

When Moran entered the batter's box with one runner aboard in the sixth inning and South Carolina ahead 4-2, he said he wanted to make sure that Frank's error didn't decide the game. Moran delivered an RBI triple and scored on a throwing error caused by Skye Bolt's decision to tag up from first on a shallow flyout to center. Bolt scored the go-ahead run on a bases-loaded, full-count walk by No. 9 hitter Parks Jordan.

Moran and his teammates succeeded in picking up Frank. By holding the Gamecocks scoreless for the final three innings, the Tar Heels did the same for Fox and pitching coach Scott Forbes.

Last June, UNC suffered its first regional loss in stunning fashion when St. John's catcher Danny Bethea hit a three-run homer off closer Michael Morin in the bottom of the ninth inning. St. John's eliminated the Tar Heels a day later, and falling short of the CWS for a second straight year would have forced Fox to endure a long offseason, particularly because of the abnormal pitching decisions his staff made while guiding a group with lofty expectations.

The move to bring ace Kent Emanuel out of the bullpen on short rest against FAU backfired, just like the follow-up move to insert fellow starter Benton Moss, who gave up the ninth-inning grand slam. Emanuel, Moss and Hobbs Johnson started the three Super Regional games and recorded a combined 19 outs, with Moss being pulled in the third inning Tuesday.

The one-day postponement of Game 3 gave shut-down reliever Trent Thornton more time to recover from a Game 1 appearance in which he picked up the win, and Thornton improved to 11-1 by recording 14 important outs in relief of Moss. Chris McCue, who pitched the eighth inning, exited in favor of Emanuel with one runner on and one out in the ninth.

Emanuel already had thrown 238 pitches in the NCAA tournament, an eye-opening total that contributed to the heated debate over whether Fox and Forbes were overworking their prized commodity. Emanuel needed only two pitches to retire two batters, record his first college save and send North Carolina back to Omaha.

"Every team has its own identity," Forbes said. "This team's identity started as soon as we gave up that home run against St. John's last year and couldn't get it done the next day against them and watched somebody celebrate on our field."

"We've got tough kids, and they didn't like that."

South Carolina had to sit back and watch North Carolina celebrate Tuesday afternoon.

Fox couldn't have scripted it any better.
